

Acknowledgments

Many people have given their time to make this manuscript possible, and I thank them for their help. Patricia Marchak, whose book Green Gold was never far from my mind when writing this manuscript, was the first to encourage me to examine the influence of hydro projects on industrial development. For sharing their analytical insights, for their continued interest, and for their supportive comments when this work was still an emerging thesis, I express my gratitude to Wallace Clement, Rianne Mahon, and John Harp of Carleton University and to June Corman of Brock University. To my friend Shahid Alvi, for the long discussions, theoretical debates, and motivational support that helped advance this work, I also express my gratitude. Without the assistance from archivists, librarians, and utility personnel in Québec, Montréal, Ottawa, Toronto, Winnipeg, and Vancouver, this book would have little substance. Anonymous readers for the Humanities and Social Sciences Federation of Canada and UBC Press have provided a thorough review. I am grateful to Gary Teeple for his encouragement when I most needed it. For the financial support from the Aid to Scholarly Publishing Programme of the Humanities and Social Sciences Federation I express my gratitude. My thankfulness extends also to Jean Wilson, senior editor of UBC Press, for her continuous support. John Marriott, Jenny Lawn, and Holly Keller-Brohman deserve credit for their helpful suggestions on improving my prose and the orderly presentation of ideas. For enduring and supporting me while I took time from them, I thank my family, Josefine, Toby, and Tina.