

Acknowledgments

Because the research for this book was undertaken over a very long period of time, it would be difficult to thank individually the many archivists and librarians who assisted me lest I accidentally overlook someone. Suffice it to say that my work was greatly eased by the co-operation and friendly advice of knowledgeable archivists and librarians. In geographical order, I particularly wish to thank the staffs of the Legislative Library of British Columbia, the British Columbia Archives and Records Service, the Library of the University of Victoria, the Special Collections Division of the University of British Columbia Library, the City of Vancouver Archives, the United Church Archives in Toronto, and the National Archives of Canada.

I would also like to thank the anonymous reader for the Social Sciences Federation and, especially, Roger Daniels of the University of Cincinnati, who read the draft manuscript and offered excellent suggestions for improvement. I greatly appreciate the patience of Jane C. Fredeman of the University of British Columbia Press in waiting for the manuscript and for the valuable editorial guidance that she and her colleague Jean Wilson have provided.

Except for the superb typists in the Department of History who read the manuscript in instalments and held their tongues when I produced more changes, my colleagues at the University of Victoria did not read this work as it was being written but they have always been very encouraging.