

Acknowledgments

Research like this is possible because of the willingness of current and former politicians and political staff to be generous with their time to share their expertise, explanations, and stories. Thank you to everyone interviewed for this book, some of you multiple times. All 131 of you listed in Appendix 1 have my sincere appreciation, as do a number of other practitioners who shared uncredited insights.

For providing interview referrals, thank you to Heather Bastedo, Susan Delacourt, Tom Flanagan, Megan Leslie, Hamish Marshall, David McGrane, Anne McGrath, Jane Philpott, Ross Reid, Donald Savoie, Danielle Smith, David Smith, and an anonymous political staffer. The Canadian Association of Former Parliamentarians kindly forwarded interview recruitment letters to some former Members of Parliament. For offering feedback on draft content, thank you to Cathy Bennett, Don Boudria, Alana Cattapan, Michael Chong, Cris de Clercy, Erin Crandall, Jim Edwards, Anna Esselment, Jay Hill, Mireille Lalancette, Dalton McGuinty, Fenwick McKelvey, Stephen Power, Jared Wesley, and some of those who provided interview referrals.

I am indebted to Nick Whalen for taking time while my Member of Parliament (St. John's East) to explain the details of how things work. We talked at length in his constituency office, in my office, in a café, and on the phone. He wrote suggestions on draft material and asked political staff to locate supplementary information. His reverence for caucus confidentiality did not appear to impede an authentic desire (seemingly shared by everyone who participated in this research) to raise awareness about Canadian parliamentary democracy.

Thank you to the Samara Centre for Democracy and Mike Morden for sharing transcripts of exit interviews with former MPs. The Samara Centre is a Toronto-based charity that conducts non-partisan research and engagement programming on Canadian democracy. Canadian society benefits from its efforts to equip citizens with information about Canadian legislatures, political parties, and citizen participation.

Jean-François Godbout generously provided MP vote data for the 42nd Parliament, and Roberto Rocha kindly provided data about candidate retweeting. For providing the photographs of framed whips in Figure 3.1, thank you to Mark Holland, Michael Penney, and an anonymous Conservative Party staffer. Memorial University students Adrian Castro Carrillo, Jessi Drohan, and Joey Rogers provided capable research assistance. Librarians at Memorial University tracked down The Noblest of Callings and Library of Parliament archival interviews. For providing other assistance along the way, thank you to Ken Carty, Thierry Giasson, Sean Holman, Guillaume La Perrière, Sean McGrath, Peter Ryan, Feodor Snagovsky, Graham Steele, Zaren Healey White, Paul Wilson, and many others, ranging from the staff in legislative libraries across Canada to the people who appear on the back cover. In particular, political science student Hannah Loder meticulously conducted research, fact-checked, read a draft of the manuscript, and helped prepare the index.

A book is only as good as the publishing team behind it. I appreciate the support of the fine people at UBC Press, including Megan Brand, Laraine Coates, Kerry Kilmartin, Nadine Pedersen, Melissa Pitts, Randy Schmidt, and Carmen Tiampo. Dallas Harrison copyedited the text, Irma Rodriguez typeset it, and Jessica Sullivan designed the cover. Their collective efforts included putting up with my many requests to refine the text.

I hold in high regard the five anonymous referees recruited by UBC Press who delivered encouraging external reports on a draft manuscript. The insightful suggestions from three expert scholars and two former MPs resulted in many improvements. Thank you.

I wish to acknowledge the financial assistance that has made the production of this book possible. Whipped has been published with the help of a grant from the Canadian Federation for the Humanities and Social Sciences, through the Awards to Scholarly Publications Program. Memorial University of Newfoundland provided financial support through its publications subvention program.

Finally, thank you to the Donner Canadian Foundation and the Atlantic Book Awards Society, whose recognition of Brand Command inspired me to conduct further research on the intersection of political communications and Canadian democratic institutions.

A key message in most authors' opening remarks is that any errors and omissions are the author's responsibility alone. A further talking point in this case is that opinions expressed in the book do not necessarily reflect those of all participants.

PS: Long after settling on the title of this book, I stumbled on the documentary Whipped: The Secret World of Party Discipline (Public Eye Media-works, 2013). Its examination of party discipline in British Columbia is an excellent companion. The film is available online from Vimeo.
