Scattered across the Great Plains of North America are thousands of enigmatic stone circles constructed by Aboriginal peoples. These so-called medicine wheels represent the spiritual keepers of Aboriginal knowledge and mark the historical stages of Aboriginal cultures. Some also function as astronomical markers that inform the timing and organization of spiritual ceremonies and help the keepers of Aboriginal calendars. The medicine wheels in this book are based on drawings found in Medicine Wheels on the Northern Plains: A Summary and Appraisal by John H. Brumley. Edmonton: Alberta Culture and Multiculturalism, Historical Resources Division, 1988. The reproductions are created with the permission of the Provincial Museum of Alberta. For more information on medicine wheels and on the museum, visit the museum's website at www.pma.edmonton.ab.ca.
