I owe a deep debt of gratitude to the many institutions, colleagues, friends, and family members who have assisted and encouraged me over the past decade. Without them, I never could have completed this book.

A number of institutions supported my research and writing. Grants from The Graduate School at Northwestern University, the Historical Society of Southern California, the Harry S Truman Library Institute, the Northwestern University Department of History, the University at Albany Faculty Research Assistance Program, and the State of New York/United University Professions Joint Labor-Management Committee Individual Development Award Program helped fund research at archives throughout the country. Dissertation fellowships from The Graduate School at Northwestern University and from the International Migration Program of the Social Science Research Council, with funds provided by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, made possible both research and writing. Generous support from the State of New York/UUP Joint Labor-Management Committee's Dr. Nuala McGann Drescher program and the Dean's office of the Weissman School of Arts and Sciences, Baruch College, City University of New York, enabled me to complete the project.

Librarians and archivists made my research much easier than it would otherwise have been. I wish to express particular thanks to David Kessler and the rest of the archivists at the Bancroft Library, University of California, Berkeley, where I did much of my research. I am also grateful to the staff at the National Archives and Records Administration II facility; the National Archives regional office in San Bruno, California; the Hoover Institution; the Stanford University Library Special Collections Department; the Young Library Special Collections Department at the University of California, Los Angeles; the California Historical Society North Baker Research Library; the Ethnic Studies Library and the Institute for Governmental Studies Library at UC Berkeley; the Harry S Truman Library Institute; the Franklin D. Roosevelt Presidential Library; the California State Library; the California State Archives; the University of Southern California Libraries Special Collections Department; the Huntington Library; the Los Angeles City Archives; the San Francisco Public Library's San Francisco History Room; the Los Angeles Public Library; and the New York Public Library's Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture.

The Department of History at Northwestern University provided a vibrant and nurturing intellectual environment and one that encouraged me to think across disciplinary borders. Faculty members Joseph Barton, Henry Binford, Laura Hein, Melissa Macauley, and Michael Sherry offered assistance and valuable suggestions on various aspects of this project. Fellow graduate students, including Wallace Best, James Burkee, Marisa Chappell, Brett Gadsden, David Johnson, Karen Leroux, Michael McCoyer, and James Wolfinger, provided valuable feedback and comments on drafts of the original dissertation. I am particularly grateful to Nancy MacLean, who served as my advisor and has offered assistance from the earliest stages of this manuscript. I am very fortunate that, in her words, "advisors are forever."

While writing Alien Neighbors, Foreign Friends, I received much valuable input and support from a host of different sources. Dan and Candy Carlberg, Jill Brooks-Garnett and Paul Garnett, and Joy and Shigeko Nishime welcomed me into their homes as I traveled for research. Shana Bernstein, Wallace Best, Brett Gadsden, Pam Griffith, Maria Lizzi, Nancy MacLean, Gail Radford, Michael Sherry, and Amy Murrell Taylor read and commented on various chapters. Xiaojian Zhao both read and offered advice on a chapter and gave me an immensely helpful book of journalist Gilbert Woo's collected essays. Mary Dudziak, Kevin Leonard, Mae Ngai, Jeffrey Sammons, Robert Self, and Jeffrey Strickland made suggestions about different aspects of the project. Ellen Wu shared her dissertation with me, while Joel Weintraub offered assistance with the 1930 and 1940 U.S. census records. Richard Sheng generously provided copies of his family's collection of newspaper clippings and letters. Iris Berger and Dan White at the University at Albany gave me the time I needed to complete major revisions to the book. Cynthia Whittaker at Baruch College helped me secure the funding to put the final touches on the manuscript, and she and my other colleagues in Baruch's History Department have been unfailingly supportive. At the University of Chicago Press, Robert Devens and Becky Nicolaides were both incredibly patient and thoroughly professional, as was cartographer Harry D. Johnson of San Diego State University.

Finally, I wish to thank my family for their love and support over the past decade. Jim and Marlene Bentzien, Gus Brooks, Joy Brooks, Lisa Brooks, Jill Brooks-Garnett, Dara Griffith, and Jennifer Tucker all contributed in various ways to the completion of this book. My father, Richard Brooks, continually encouraged me in my work, and my mother, Peggy Brooks, never doubted that I would complete this project, even though she did not live to see it. Lastly, I am profoundly thankful for the love and support of my partner, Pam Griffith. Although I write about housing, she has shown me the true meaning of home.
