

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I wish to express my gratitude to those people who helped make this project possible. My interest in and knowledge of the topics addressed in this book was fostered by discussions at the University of Chicago with Andrew Abbott, Elizabeth Clemens, Andreas Glaeser, Hans Joas, Ryon Lancaster, Donald Levine, John Lucy, John Levi Martin, Moishe Postone, and Robert Schwartz. Without the inexhaustible encouragement and insightful guidance of Abbott, Glaeser, and Joas, this project could not have been accomplished.

My colleagues were an outstanding source of support and commiseration throughout the research and writing. In particular, I would like to thank Mary Akchurin, Emily Art, Julia Burdick-Will, Paola Castaño, Brian Cody, Michael Corey, Gordon Douglas, Suzy Smith, Michaela Soyer, and Bijan Warner for many discussions and for their camaraderie. In addition, I had the benefit of many other discussions with a large number of Chicago faculty members and students at different stages of this project from which the final product certainly improved.

In a consequential meeting, Andrew Abbott suggested I check out the manuscript collections at the University of Chicago Library, especially the notes of Ellsworth Faris from his courses with George Herbert Mead. The resulting investigation raised more questions than answers and provoked me to begin connecting the problems of interpretation of Mead and his students with my interest in the sociology of knowledge. I also had the good fortune to attend Abbott's practicum "Library Methods for the Social Sciences," which contributed substantially to my education in archival and primary document research.

Researchers could hardly ask for a better home base than the Special Collections Research Center at the University of Chicago. The outstanding staff, over and above their excellent holdings, makes it a thoroughly enjoyable and productive working environment. In particular, I would like to thank Barbara Gilbert, Julia Gardner, and the many student pages for all of their assistance and patience with my incessant questions and requests. I would like to thank the helpful staff and faculty at the University of Illinois–Chicago Special Collections, the American Baptist Historical Society, the Chicago History Museum, the Institute for American Thought, the University of Michigan Bentley Historical Library, the Minnesota Historical Society, the Northwestern University Special Collections, the Schlesinger Library on the History of Women in America, the Southern Illinois University Morris Library Special Collections, Richard Ford and the staff at the University of Chicago Office of the University Registrar, and the archivists and librarians across the globe who humored me by answering my odd questions and checking into collections for me. For a week in March 2010 I turned a set of desks at the Peirce Edition Project at the Institute for American Thought into a field headquarters, and had the outstanding benefit of the resources and feedback of David Pfeiffer, André De Tienne, and Cornelis de Waal.

Thanks also go to the many scholars (of Mead and otherwise) who have traded enthusiasm and information with me remotely or in person. I greatly appreciated discussions with chairs, co-presenters, commentators, and audiences at academic conferences, including the American Sociological Association, the Social Science History Association, the History of Science Society, and the International Sociological Association Research Committee on the History of Sociology. I would also like to thank the students in my courses for discussing issues related to my research in more detail than they likely expected. I consistently found that in preparing for class, in conducting class discussions, and in assessing student work, my own thinking was advanced by the participation of outstanding students.

I wish to express my gratitude to Doug Mitchell and Tim McGovern at the University of Chicago Press for their care and dedication in seeing this project through the editorial process, and to the manuscript reviewers for their thoughtful comments. A portion of this project was supported by an Andrew W. Mellon Foundation/University of Chicago Division of the Social Sciences Dissertation Fellowship. Sections of chapter 5 are reprinted from “The Construction of Mind, Self, and Society: The Social Process behind G. H. Mead’s Social Psychology,” Journal of the History of the Behavioral Sciences 48, no. 2 (2012): 134–53; and “Scholarly Publishing Projects in the Great Depression: The Works of G. H. Mead and the Payne Fund Studies," in Knowledge for Whom? Public Sociology in the Making, ed. Christian Fleck and Andreas Hess (Farnham: Ashgate, 2014).

Finally, I would like to extend a special thank-you to my family for their unconditional love and support. It is to my mother and father, brother and sister, and my partner that I owe by far the largest debt of gratitude for continuing to shape who I am.
