

---

Acknowledgments

---

This project is part of the National Bureau of Economic Research's Program on Children, which seeks to bring economists together to study the range of issues related to child well-being. I am grateful to Martin Feldstein, former President of the NBER, for the suggestions and encouragement that provided the impetus for this project.

This project was supported by generous funding from the Annie E. Casey Foundation. I am grateful to Brian Lyght at the Casey Foundation for his assistance through the project. While I thank the Foundation for their support, I also acknowledge that the findings and conclusions presented in this report are those of the authors alone, and do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Foundation.

The papers in this volume were presented at a conference at Amelia Island Plantation in April 2007. The NBER conference staff, and in particular Brett Maranjian, worked tirelessly to make this a terrific experience for everyone involved. Helena Fitz-Patrick was her usual expert self in guiding us through the review process and turning these papers into a final volume.

