

CONTENTS

Introduction: Seeing the Past Through Maps 8

1. 1490–1600: Contact and Discovery 10

2. 1600–1700: Early Settlement and the Northwest Passage 34

3. 1700–1783: Imperialism and Independence 64

4. 1783–1835: A Nation Realized 98

5. 1835–1874: Expansion, Fragmentation, and Reunification 124

6. 1874–1914: Industrialization and Its Discontents 150

7. 1914–1940: Prosperity, Depression, and Reform 176

8. 1940–1962: Between War and Abundance 204

9. 1962–2001: An Unsettled Peace 232

Afterword: The Road Ahead 258

Endnotes and Additional Sources 260

List of Maps 264

Index 266

Acknowledgments 272

Edward Savage's portrait of President George Washington and the first family gathered around a map of the proposed national capital on the Potomac River. Maps of Washington, D.C. circulated widely in the 1790s, and became instantly recognizable and iconic symbols of national promise in the new United States. For more on this map see page 106.

