Over the fifteen years of research that has gone into this study, I have accumulated so many debts that it is impossible to recognize them all here. I must thank first my adoptive extended family in Nigeria, whose friendship and support made this work possible: the Onuzos, to whom I owe my original interest in the subject; Kehinde and Taiwo Johnson, who taught me everything I needed to know about Lagos but was afraid to ask; Tokunbo, Yomi, 'Lara, Segun, Clement, and a host of other friends. I owe a great deal to Professor Claude Ake, whose spirit is present in these pages. I thank the Department of Political Science at UNILAG and Professor Jinadu for their warm hospitality, and the numerous colleagues and students who assisted me with my research and made my experience in the department so rewarding. I thank Pastor Tony Rapu for allowing me to work with his ministry; Pastor Abiona, Pastor Okotie, Brother Tosin, Brother Bernard, and Sister Funmi for teaching so much about their movement; and those countless others who gave their time and energy to help me during my first two years in Lagos. I thank the British Academy for funding my Research Fellowship at SOAS between 1996 and 2000. I am ever grateful to Louis Brenner and J. D. Y. Peel at SOAS, and Karin Barber and Paulo de Moraes Farias at Birmingham for the remarkable opportunity of working with them for three years on the New

Religious Publics and the Media in Nigeria Project. In Ibadan, I cannot thank enough for his extraordinary work my colleague and friend, Dr. Matthews Ojo. I am grateful as well for the remarkable contributions of Dr. Hakeem Danmole and our field assistants, in particular Franklin Ukah. I am grateful to Dr. Yann Lebeau and the staff of the IFRA in Ibadan for their assistance in the late 1990s. In Ibadan since 2006, I must thank my staff at IFRA for their assistance, especially Martin Esukise Mbella, as well as my colleagues Guillaume Thiery and David Enweremadu. I'm grateful to the people at home for keeping the show on the road: Elisabeth, Kenneth, and Double G. I must also thank those who were there from the beginning at Oxford and have suffered with me over the years, encouraging me to continue my research and writing: first, Gavin Williams, whose patience has been tried, but whose faith has never wavered; my dear friend Jocelyn Alexander; Terry Ranger, David Maxwell, Karin Barber, Louis Brenner, Paulo de Moraes Farias, Raufu Mustapha, and many others. I thank my French academic family whose intellectual support over the years has greatly contributed to the realization of this study and whose dear friendship has sustained me: Richard Banégas, Jean-François Bayart, Béatrice Hibou, Peter Geschiere, Achille Mbembe, Roland Marchal, and Janet Roitman. I especially thank Richard Banégas, Béatrice Hibou, and Juan Obarrio for their unwavering friendship and support during the difficult process of writing. My eternal thanks to my spiritual brother for God's money, the new life and a gift beyond debt. I am ever grateful to my family for their patience, love, and support: my parents; my siblings John (thanks for making that bet), Kim, and Fiona; and of course my three saving graces, Chloë, Elise, and Anna, for their mostly cheerful forbearance, their unwavering faith, and their enthusiastic egging on. Thanks also to JM for teaching me the true sense of overcoming. I would like especially to thank J. D. Y. Peel, without whom this endless project would never have been realized. His constant support, faith, and friendship, as well as his careful reading and criticism of my work, have made all the difference.
