It takes at least a community to produce a book, and I relied on many overlapping communities in the research and writing of this one. My few remarks here only dimly reflect the debts I owe to institutions, colleagues, friends, and family.

I am fortunate to have had numerous worthy mentors who were excellent examples of the best in academic life. During my undergraduate years at Columbia, James Shenton provided a vibrant example of dedication to teaching. Often during the writing of this book I have thought of his passion for teaching about the history of race and ethnicity in this country and his love of New York City. Doron Ben-Atar, Randy Bergstrom, Rebecca Berlow, Steve Forrey, and Eric Foner all believed that I had a contribution to make as a historian and encouraged me to consider an academic career.

At Stanford, Carl Degler, Estelle Freedman, and George Fredrickson were different, wonderful models of the humane academy, testimonies to the fact that one can be dedicated to research and writing about the past while maintaining a commitment to changing the present and future. Luis Arroyo provided me with a strong background in U.S. labor history, and Richard Roberts did the same for African labor history. Clay and Susan Carson provided me with valuable experiences and contacts through the Martin Luther King, Jr., Papers Project. There I was fortunate to meet many valuable friends and colleagues, including Allison Dorsey, Crystal Feimster, Erica Armstrong, Katrina Nusum, Penny Russell, Pete Holloran, Karl Knapper, Megan Maxwell, Stewart Burns, and Jane Benson.

Ira Berlin and Leslie Rowland helped me gain a postdoctoral fellowship at the University of Maryland. Ira graciously read several drafts of the first four chapters of this book and offered trenchant criticism. While I was at Maryland, Ira, Leslie, Bill Bravman, Robyn Muncy and Tony Speranza, Daryle Williams, and Carla Peterson were supportive colleagues and friends.

Colleagues and friends have provided unending support and helpful criticism over the long course of this project. My wonderful, sustaining writing group of Karen Dunn-Haley, Ariela Gross, Wendy Lynch, Renee Romano, Wendy Wall, and Alice Yang-Murray read numerous incarnations of the manuscript. At Emory, Margot Finn and Mary Odem gave great writing and publishing advice. I owe a special debt to Mary (and to her husband, Ralph Gilbert); she read part of the manuscript while on her honeymoon! Other members of the history department at Emory have also been unfailingly collegial. In particular I thank Matthew Payne, Leroy Davis, Jim Roark, Jonathan Prude, Dan Carter, Michael Bellesiles, Kristin Mann, Heide Fehrenbach, Jeffrey Lesser, and Randy Packard. Other Emory colleagues who lent advice and support over the years include Rudolph Byrd, Frances Smith-Foster, Mark Sanders, Kim Wallace-Sanders, Randall Burkett, Virginia Shadron, Cris Levenduski, Judy Rohrer, Julie Abraham, Amy Lang, and Cindy Patton.

During my 1998–1999 sabbatical year in New York City at Columbia University and the Schomburg Center for Research in Black History and Culture, I was fortunate to gain another circle of colleagues from whom I learned a great deal. My appreciation goes to Carolyn Brown, Martha Hodes, Jeffrey Stewart, Margaret Vendreyes, Craig Wilder, Zita Nunes, Debra King, and Colin Palmer for their fellowship. Many thanks also go to Diana Lachatanere, Zita Nunes, and Colin Palmer for their leadership of the Schomburg Center's Scholars-in-Residence program. Betsy Blackmar was my sponsor for a Ford Foundation Fellowship at Columbia University; she helped me make the most of my research year. Erica Armstrong, Martha Jones, and Adrienne Petty also provided much support and advice.

Scholars of New York City and of free blacks have been unfailingly generous. I thank Christine Stansell, Jim and Lois Horton, David Roediger, Anne Boylan, Graham Hodges, Shane White, Craig Wilder, Patrick Rael, and Michael Sappol for sharing their research and for the inspiration their scholarship provided. I also thank the Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History, the American Historical Association, the American Studies Association, the Organization of American Historians, the Washington Seminar on American History and Culture, the Emory University African American Studies Faculty Workshop, Wesleyan University, Princeton University, the University of Maryland, the University of Michigan, and the Atlanta Seminar on the Comparative History of Labor, Industry, Technology and Society, for giving me the opportunity to present my work to interesting, thoughtful audiences.

I could not have completed this book without many forms of material assistance. Stanford University's Graduate School of Arts and Sciences, the Stanford Humanities Center, Emory University, the University of Maryland, the Ford Foundation Postdoctoral Fellowship Program for Minorities, the Mellon Foundation, the Schomburg Center, and the Littleton-Griswold Fund of the American Historical Association have my deep appreciation. Jennifer Meares, Lisa Roy, Rik van Welie, and Scott Gavorsky provided valued research assistance. Sarah Zingarelli of Emory University's Biomedical Imaging Services and Scott Gavorsky provided inestimable help with the maps herein. I have been fortunate to work with Jim Grossman, Historical Studies of Urban America series coeditor, and Doug Mitchell, Robert Devens, Tim McGovern, Jenni Fry, and Catherine Beebe of the University of Chicago Press, all of whom have made the publishing process as trouble-free as possible.

For providing housing during the many months I spent researching and writing in New York City, I'd like to thank Alicia and James Reiger, Jill Levey-Powlen, Adrienne Petty, Julie Abraham, Neal Goren, and Carolyn Brown. Other friends had to live with me as I wrote the dissertation and the book. For their patience with a sometimes grumpy writer, I thank Marvin Peguese, Kirsten Nussbaumer, Sally Collins, Lisa Pavlovsky, and Rich Gee in San Francisco; Bill Bravman and Wendy Lynch in Washington, D.C.; Jill Levey-Powlen, Lucia Riviuccio, and Kathy Kenny in Brooklyn; and Cindy Patton, Angela Smircic, and Anne Dacey in Atlanta. A special thanks goes to John Andrews and Bill O'Brien. During the winter of 1993, when the New-York Historical Society threatened to close due to financial difficulties, John graciously shared his tiny studio apartment with me, and Bill took time from his own writing to help me take notes at the society.

Many archivists and libraries provided the raw material fundamental to this book. Thanks go to Sonia Moss of the Stanford University Interlibrary Loan office and to the staffs at the Emory University Interlibrary Loan office, the American Antiquarian Society (especially Nancy Burkett), the New-York Historical Society, the New York Municipal Archives, the New York Public Library, the New York State Library and Archives, the Schomburg Center, the Library of Congress, the Quaker Collection at Haverford College, the Friends Historical Library at Swarthmore College, the Amistad Research Collection, and the Columbia University Library.

More personally, family and friends have provided constant encouragement. I thank Alison Bailes; Allison Dorsey; Daryl Scott; Eileen McCarthy;

Carrie Bramen and David Schmid; David Goldberger; Todd Benson and Jenny Solario; Stephanie and Tony Manzella; Carole, Julio, and Michelle Baez; Cynthia Blair; Elizabeth DuPont Spencer; Judie Annozine; Alicia Cozine; Miriam Goderich; Alicia Reiger; Barbara Cutter; Suzanne Roth; Jill Levey-Powlen; Stacey Wakeley; Jeannine Verrett; and Mrs. Marianne Newman. A special thanks goes to my Atlanta family: Mary Odem, Ralph Gilbert, Felicia Gilbert, Isabelle Gilbert, and Leah Gilbert Odem. Joan Lally, Jesse Harris Bathrick, and Ilene Schroeder gave me important new strategies for thinking about my life and work. Elizabeth Baez was my central emotional support during many of the years I spent on this project. Jackie Scott contributed almost daily sustenance on all things academic and personal. Erica Armstrong encouraged me to finish it, already! Miranda Pollard coached, coaxed, and cajoled the final revisions out of me. My sisters, brothers-in-law, and nephews—Regina and David Bartholomew, Jennifer and Shane Jones, Rachel Harris, David Bartholomew IV, Reginald Bartholomew, Devin Jones, and Ryan Jones—made me want to finish the book so they could read it. Most of all, my parents Merle Ann and Reginald Harris instilled in me an understanding of the importance of education and an appreciation of and thirst for knowledge. To them, this book is gratefully dedicated.

Parts of chapters six, eight, and nine previously appeared in altered form in “From Abolitionist Amalgamators to ‘Rulers of the Five Points’: The Discourse of Interracial Sex and Reform in Antebellum New York City,” on pages 191–212 of Sex, Love, Race: Crossing Boundaries in North America, edited by Martha Hodes and published in 1999 by New York University Press, New York.
