Cultural studies critic Cary Wolfe once wrote, “trying to give an overview of the burgeoning area known as animal studies is, if you’ll permit me the expression, a bit like herding cats” (2009: 564). Herding cats, indeed!

Without the aid of numerous people and organizations, this textbook could not have been written. I owe thanks to more people than I can possibly mention but will here thank those who most directly helped me to get this book off the ground. First, I have to acknowledge the work of the Animals and Society Institute (ASI), a research and educational organization that advances the status of animals in public policy and promotes the study of human–animal relationships. I owe my deepest thanks to the countless people I have met in the field through my work at ASI and who, in a variety of ways, have helped me with my own research. But I want to especially call out Ken Shapiro, ASI’s board president, for his support over the past eighteen years. All proceeds raised from the sale of this textbook will, as with the previous edition, be donated to ASI to support the organization’s important work. In fact, if it weren’t for meeting Ken at an animal rights conference in 2002, I would not have known about the existence of the field of human–animal studies and most likely would not have returned to teaching after having left the field a few years earlier. If it weren’t for Ken and my work with ASI, my life would be very different today.

I am also thankful to Wendy Lochner at Columbia University Press for expressing an interest in this book (after many years of rejections from other publishers) and for her work in expanding Columbia’s Animal Studies series. I first began shopping this book around in 2005 and was told by each publisher I approached that the market was too small to support such a text.

Wendy recognized both the importance and growth of the field of HAS, and she knew that with that growth would, indeed, come an audience for this book. (And here we are, ten years later, with a second edition for this growing market!) Through Wendy, six anonymous readers provided feedback on the first edition of this manuscript, and I am grateful to all of them. I am especially grateful to Ralph Acampora, whose comments on chapter 18 were invaluable in its improvement. Thank you also to Lisa Lunghofer for providing valuable feedback on chapter 12. Another set of reviewers commented on the second edition, and I give my thanks to them as well.

I am grateful to the following colleagues and friends for providing essays on their own work, which are included in these chapters. Thanks to Susan McHugh, Clinton Sanders, Laura Hobgood-Oster, Vasile Stanescu, Leslie Irvine, Gay Bradshaw, Walt Putnam, David Fennell, David Redmalm, Lisa Lunghofer, Kendra Coulter, Maneesha Deckha, Maria Lux, Carrie Rohman, Alexandra Horowitz, and Kathie Jenni for generously contributing in this way. I also want to thank everyone who provided photos for this book: Ruth Burke, Dennis Low, Maria Lux, Nathan Poirier, Darek Jadzok, Paul Becker, Marie-France Boissonneault, Maria Lux, Jill Howard Church, Regina Grace, Gabriela Kompatscher-Gufler, Samantha L. Haeussner, Cassandra Bugir, Anita Carswell, Annette Evangelista, Carol Adams, Christine Morrissey of Harvest Home Animal Sanctuary, Criss Starr of New Mexico House Rabbit Society, Mary Cotter, Drew Trujillo, Ed Turlington, Ed Urbanski and Yvonne Boudreaux of Prairie Dog Pals, Elizabeth Emelene Jefferis, Great Ape Trust, Jonnie Russell, Karen Diane Knowles, Kate Turlington, Kerrie Bushway, Linda Walden, Mark Dion through the Tanya Bonakdar Gallery, Mercy for Animals, People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, Robin Montgomery, Suzi Hibbard, the Jane Goodall Institute, Tracy Martin, Vicki DeMello, and Yvette Watt.

I am also grateful to the many photographers who contributed their work for free to Wikimedia Commons; many of the images in this book came from that site. I especially want to extend my appreciation to Dan Piraro, creator of the syndicated comic strip Bizarro, for generously granting me the use of his award-winning cartoons for this book.

Finally, I am personally grateful to my family for their support, love, and encouragement; to my husband, Tom Young, who has cared for me through thick and thin; and to my dear friends, Gay Bradshaw and Karen Courtemanche, for their love. I am also deeply grateful to the community at Brookside for helping me through a particularly challenging time. And last but certainly not least, I owe perhaps the greatest thanks to the nonhuman animals—rabbits, cats, dogs, and birds—who have shared my life. I cannot imagine where I would be personally or professionally if it weren't for their presence in my life.
