I began working on this collection of John Dewey's public writings in 2011. Along the way, many people were essential in the development of this project. At the time, I was teaching at the University of Mississippi, in which my department chair, Dr. Robert Haws was immensely supportive. I am also grateful to Dr. Doug Sullivan-Gonzalez, dean of the Sally McDonnell Barksdale Honors College at the University of Mississippi, for the support that work with his college provided me over the years. Those funds enabled me to hire two undergraduate research assistants, Christine Dickason and Elizabeth Lococo, who deserve key thanks for their work on this project. By 2013, I had narrowed my selections down to just over sixty essays from Dewey's vast corpus as candidates for inclusion in this volume. The following year, I enlisted Christine's and Elizabeth's help as they were two of the most talented undergraduate students I have had the privilege to hire as research assistants. They read through all of the essays that I had selected, letting me know which they found to be the most compelling, where they found matters to be needing more introduction or prefacing, and more. Their thoughts on the initial selection of essays enabled me to trim the collection down to the most powerful and timely essays for readers today. Their reactions were invaluable for my editorial work and writing aimed at introducing and explaining the essays included here.

This collection would have been impossible without the mentorship that I was fortunate to receive from Dr. Larry A. Hickman, former director of the Center for Dewey Studies and professor emeritus at Southern Illinois University Carbondale, in Carbondale, IL. Furthermore, I am one of the lucky few to have more than one mentor. Dr. John Lachs of Vanderbilt University has guided me countless times at all stages of my career, including with respect to this project. I am grateful to John and Larry both for being my guiding examples.

Angela Moore-Swofford of Southern Illinois University Press was supportive and kind in the process of checking and procuring the permissions to republish Dewey's essays included in this volume. I am thankful to her and to SIU's board of trustees for permission to use Dewey's essays, as well as for Angela's help and support.

Dr. Tibor Solymosi has long been a good friend and colleague and for this volume generously offered me editorial feedback on my selections and introductions to the essays. The collection is significantly stronger than it would have been without his help. I am also grateful to the blind reviewers whose feedback helped me to strengthen the organization of these essays.

My colleagues in the Department of Educational Policy Studies and Evaluation in the University of Kentucky's College of Education have been a great source of support and encouragement as well. I am grateful to my colleague Dr. Beth Goldstein, who advised me on matters relating to the publication of this collection. Dr. Kelly Bradley has been an ideal department chair, and her encouragement has meant a great deal to me. Dr. John Thelin, my senior faculty mentor in the department, is an exemplar of the publicly engaged scholar whom I hope to emulate. In addition, I am excited that my college's new dean, Dr. Julian Vasquez Heilig, has shown already both in words and deeds, in his career and here in our college, that he champions publicly engaged scholarship, the kind of spirit which animates this volume.

I also owe thanks to John W. Wright, of the John W. Wright Literary Agency, who encouraged me to submit this project to Columbia University Press. My editor, Wendy Lochner, of the press has been wonderful to work with and has been understanding and supportive at every step.

Without question, I am most grateful to my family, especially to my brilliant wife, Dr. Annie Davis Weber, who has been my strongest supporter. My parents, Drs. Collin and Dominique Weber, have also been proud of my work in philosophy from the beginning. And my in-laws, Dr. Paul and Jane Davis, have been kind and supportive at every turn. I am truly, deeply fortunate and am grateful to each of these people and many more beyond them.

In the spirit of John Dewey, I must thank all of the many students I have worked with, who have inspired me with their thoughts and questions throughout nearly two decades of teaching in higher education. I hope that this collection of essays honors all that these many people have taught me and shares with others the inspiration that drew me in to philosophy and its dialogue with life and policy.
