

CONTENTS

Introduction	xi
Andrews and His Age: A Chronology, 1863-1943	xv

PART I: THE FORMATIVE YEARS

1886-1903

Chapter 1. The Legacy of Herbert Baxter Adams	3
1. Johns Hopkins and Herbert Adams	5
2. The Theory of the Village Community	14
3. The Old English Manor	20
4. The Legacy of Herbert Adams	25
Chapter 2. A Portrait of the Historian as a Young Man	29
1. A Portrait of the Individual	31
2. The Nature and Uses of History	37
3. The Scientific Historian	42
4. The Tendency of History	46
5. The System Applied—Writing History	49
6. The System Applied—Teaching History	55
7. The Historian Views the New History	58

PART II: THE COLONIAL PERIOD

OF AMERICAN HISTORY

Chapter 3. Colonies, Archives, and Guides	63
1. Early America Revisited	63
2. Old Materials for a New History	68
3. Guides to Early America	71

Chapter 4. Major Themes	79
1. Some Postulates for a New History	80
2. The Settlements	83
3. England's Commercial and Colonial Policies	89
4. The Revolution	93
5. The Contribution of Andrews	98

PART III: THE LATER YEARS

1903-1943

Chapter 5. Summa Historica, 1903-1943	109
1. The Nature and Uses of History	110
2. The Role of the Historian	118
3. The Tendency of History	130
Chapter 6. The Master, the Apprentices, and the Gild	144

PART IV: THE HISTORIAN

AND HIS TIMES

Chapter 7. Andrews and the New Colonial History	163
1. One Generation Passeth Away . . .	163
2. The Principles of the New Colonial History	166
3. The Contents of the New Colonial History	178
4. Andrews and His Contemporaries	182
Chapter 8. New Times, New Histories	193
1. . . . Another Generation Cometh	193
2. The Historian as Social Thinker	202
Conclusion	220
Notes	225
Bibliography	257
Index	267