

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I am grateful to David C. Kang, Victor D. Cha, and Anne Routon for their inspiration to write this book. Two scholars provided superb feedback on the proposal in 2015, which steered the scope of the book in a manageable direction. I am honored to work with Caelyn Cobb in the process of editing, refining, and slimming down this manuscript, while retaining its core importance. I am grateful to Patricia Bower for her excellent copyedit of this book. Two anonymous reviewers read and gave expert feedback on the entire book in a timely, respectful, and detailed manner. I was struck by the sensitivity and care with which they responded to the material.

Among scholars and friends, I wish to thank Jieun Baek, Aleesa Cohene, Danielle Chubb, Carol Dusseer, James Farrer, Anna Fifield, Valérie Gelézeau, Stephan Haggard, Chris Hess, Joon Grane Hetland, Keith Howard, Joanna Hosaniak, Faith Geraghty, Teodora Gyupchanova, Edward Howel, Gwangil Jung, Jean Lee, Seayoun Lee, Anne McKnight, Kathy Moon, Johan Pottier, Leela Rnlt, Jordan A. Y. Smith, Hyun S. Song, David Wank, and Andrew Yeo. Many people cannot be named here as doing so would curtail their access to North Korea in the future.

I am grateful to my parents and my family for encouraging me as I worked through this manuscript. Mary Anna Hawkshaw, thank you for providing necessary mental escapes, fun, and comfort; Pat and Erin, thank you for giving me a quiet, secluded place in which to work on the last phase of the publication. Erin, thanks for asking, “Are you done yet?” as a method of greeting, which made me hide from you and finish. I am grateful to my sisters for providing legal and medical expertise on matters in the book. I am also grateful to my little ones, I.F. and the two who came along in the process, S.P.F. and R.D.A.

My research assistant for this book was Yeonji Ghim, a brilliant, capable, and impressive young scholar—thank you, Yeonji, for the quick turnaround on materials, for your intuition, and for your dedication. Anyone would be lucky to have you as a research assistant, and I am grateful to have had you on board. Yeonji also provided help checking my Korean to English translations, transcribed many of the North Korean documentaries, and “drank the Kool-Aid” with me as we pored over North Korea’s state media together. She also translated materials from Chinese and Japanese.

Some of the news articles in this text are from Russian, Chinese, Czech, and Swahili language sources. I am grateful to translation assistance from Evgeniya Kawai, Lenka, NaVylete, and Kinyua L. Kithinji.

I am deeply grateful to my colleagues in the Faculty of Liberal Arts at Sophia University for selecting this manuscript for two grants that helped in the research and preparation of the manuscript. The Academy of Korean Studies provided a grant that helped research into military civilian relations in the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea (Grant number: AKS-2014-R04). During the writing of this book, portions of chapters were presented at universities in the United States and Japan. I am grateful to the gathering of faculty and students at these institutes where ideas for this book could be road-tested prior to publication: Wellesley College, the University of Oregon, Yale University’s Council on East Asia Relations, and Hitotsubashi University.
