

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

BECAUSE THIS book is an agglomeration of various projects that I have undertaken over the past twenty-five years, there are many people and institutions to recognize.

The project benefited from a series of research grants that supported my studying climate politics and climate activism in the United States and internationally: The William and Flora Hewlett Foundation, the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, the U.S. National Science Foundation (NSF), the Swiss Federal Institute of Aquatic Science and Technology (EAWAG), the Oeschger Center for Climate Change Research at the University of Bern, and the Norwegian Research Council have all supported research that is included in this book.

The data presented in this book include those collected from policy actors, as well as extended interview data collected from numerous organizers and activists who gave their time generously to speak with me while they were working as both insiders and outsiders in response to the climate crisis.

Data analysis and early writing was conducted during my time as Distinguished Visiting Scholar at the John W. Kluge Center of the Library of Congress in 2022. It was such a treat to have this time at the Library of Congress to work on the project. I will never forget my time coding interview transcripts in the most beautiful reading room in the world! Because I had used the Library of Congress as my informal Capitol Hill base while I was conducting the U.S. component of my dissertation research twenty-five years ago, it was an extra-special treat to get to have this time and an official desk to use at the Kluge Center.

The book also benefited from informal conversations with colleagues at the Brookings Institution, where I have served as Non-Resident Senior Fellow for the past two years, along with many conversations with Andrew Jorgenson, Lorien Jasny, and Erika Svendsen, all of whom provided their unique perspectives and a sounding board for my ideas as they developed. I could not wish for a better set of colleagues and collaborators.

Thanks are also due to Adam Met for the many conversations we had about on-ramps to engagement and climate activism as I was getting started on the writing, as well as to Lyle Andrews, for taking time out of his busy schedule in summer 2023 to give me input on an almost-final draft while I was finishing my editing. Finally, thanks to Peloton for keeping me sane . . . I discovered you when the world shut down and you kept me going through the pandemic and beyond.

I also want to thank the students from my spring 2023 Global Activism class at the University of Maryland. To Mohammed, Emmanuel, Viktoriia, Veyli, and Jessica: thank you for talking through my ideas and how they connect to the social movements literature, as well as for sharing your personal experiences as leaders and activists in various global movements. I consider myself extremely lucky to have had you all in my class. You are an inspiration, and you give me hope for the future!

Once again, I want to thank my editor, Eric Schwartz, who was open to thinking about the climate crisis in a very different way and willing to talk me through the dark spaces. He was a supporter of the ideas that turned into this book project from the very beginning. The book is better thanks to his input and the great work of his colleagues at Columbia University Press.

Finally, I want to thank my children: Margot and Conrad. Hopefully, you will look back on my time hiding in my office editing and writing and talking apocalyptic optimism over meals fondly. I sincerely hope that when you are my age, you will be able to think about this period of writing and stressing and feel like it was a good use of my time. Last, but definitely not least, thanks to my Aaron: I couldn't do any of this without you and your support. I couldn't wish for a better coparent, partner, and friend!!
