

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I wrote this book. Its flaws and limitations are mine. Its strengths are a result of the kindness and insight of the people and communities that helped me research and write it. Many, without whom this project would have been impossible, I am not able to name here. Some appear as anonymized sources in the following chapters, some do not. I will be forever in awe of people in the border communities of Tunisia and Morocco who gave me their time, their trust, their hospitality, and their stories, and I hope that I have been able to do them justice. There are, however, some people I can name.

First and foremost, I am indebted to Kate Meagher, who has been everything you wish for in a mentor and without whose guidance I would not have made sense of much of this. Similarly at the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE) I am grateful for the support and insight of John Sidel, Steffen Hertog, Portia Roelofs, Nicolai Schulz, Valentina Zagaria, Catherine Boone, Moritz Schmoll, Susan Hoult, Rose Harris, and Nina Craven. Florian Weigand and all the contributors to the Routledge Handbook of Smuggling have been a source of advice and inspiration. At Oxford University's Middle East Centre, I am indebted to Adeel Malik and Michael Willis for their encouragement and insight, as well as Noa Schonmann, Maria Bruckmann, Jennifer Ruth Shutek, Anna Jacobs, and Megan O'Donnell. Grace Fussell created the maps used in chapter 2. Peter Andreas,

George Joffé, Thomas Hüsken, Matt Herbert, Chloe Skinner, Sofya Shahab, Diana Kim, and Ferdinand Eibl provided valuable advice, insight, and feedback. I would also like to thank my colleagues at the Institute of Development Studies and the team at the International Centre for Tax and Development, who allowed me to finish this book and who make it a joy to be in this profession.

In Tunisia, I am most indebted to Mohamed in Ben Guerdane, for his fantastic translation, his patience and trust, his driving and part-time bodyguarding skills, and his insight and perspective. I am also grateful for the support and advice of two legends of the Centre d'Etudes Maghrébines à Tunis (CEMAT), Larry Michalak and Laryssa Chomiak, as well as Monica Marks, Hamza Meddeb, Rafaa Tabib, Kamel Laroussi, Mohamed Dhia Hammami, and Safa Belghith. In Morocco, I am particularly indebted to Jaouad and Mawya, not merely for their translation, but also for the engagement, heart, and care that they brought to the project. I am also grateful to everyone in Oujda who took me in and offered me their perspective: Isabelle, the Znasni boys, Soumia, Larbi, and Ute. In Nador, my particular thanks go to Fouad and his team, who shared their insights and included me in their travels, and in Melilla to Laia Soto.

I was fortunate during this project to have spent some time as a visiting scholar at the Hilary Clinton Centre for Women's Empowerment at Al-Akhawayn University Ifrane (AUI) in Morocco, and at the German Institute for International and Security Affairs (SWP) in Berlin. I am very grateful to both institutions for their support. At AUI, I would particularly like to thank Doris Gray, and Katja Žvan Elliott; at the SWP, I would like to thank Isabelle Werenfels, Stephan Roll, Luca Mieke, Wolfram Lacher, Jürgen Rogalski, Barbara Heckl, and the entire wonderful team of the FGo6.

I acknowledge and am grateful for the financial support of the Economic and Social Research Council, who funded my studentship, fieldwork, language training, and overseas institutional visits. I am also grateful to the British Society for Middle Eastern Studies, who awarded me the Abdullah Al Mubarak Al Sabah Foundation prize, which further supported my fieldwork.

At Columbia University Press, I am grateful to Marc Lynch, Caelyn Cobb, and Monique Laban for taking this on, and for their guidance along the way, as well as Anita O'Brien, Marisa Lastres, and Reshma Sumitra.

Parts of chapter 3 have been published in the context of my article “Informal Institutions and the Regulation of Smuggling in North Africa” in Perspectives on Politics.

Aside from curiosity and anxiety, caffeine is the main input into the academic production function. Most of this book was written at The Elgin in Maida Vale and the Backwood Café in Brighton, which unfortunately did not survive the pandemic. Whittard’s marvelous Milk Oolong and Bird & Blend’s Butter Brew worked secret wonders.

These have been long and not always easy years. I am deeply indebted to all of you who stuck with me, put up with me, and had my back. Andy, Varshini, Safa, Sandhya, Charlotte, Phil and Ciara, Hayley, my brother Oskar, and my parents Andrea and Martin, to whom this book is dedicated. You know what you did. Thank you.
