STAFF

As indicated in the foreword, each member of the staff contributed significantly in the preparation of this book. Special note must be taken, however, of the work of James K. Anderson who developed the basic statistical framework for the analysis of the flow of military manpower during World War II and for the procedures used in developing the case materials of men who were assigned to the Special Training Units; and that of Robert W. Smuts who is largely responsible for developing the basic data and analysis underlying Chapter 3 and for the preliminary analysis of Chapters 9, 10, and 11. Jeanne Tomblen saw the manuscript through successive drafts, and Ruth Szold Ginzberg carried the major editorial burden.
