

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PART I

CHAPTER I

LEGITIMACY, REVOLUTION AND RECOGNITION

PAGE

Legitimacy as an historical problem	19
Dynastic legitimacy.	20
Monarchic legitimacy.	20
Dejure-ism.	20
Legitimacy in the Middle Ages	21
Divine right.	21
Feudal vs. popular consciousness.	22
Reformation and popular participation	22
Character of the religious wars.	23
Lutheran and Calvinist doctrines and legitimacy	23
The Monarchomachs	24
Popular participation a theoretic and not a practical necessity.	25
Political failure of the Monarchomach movement.	25
Divine right in England	26
James I. and royal prerogative	27
Anti-monarchic tendencies	27
The Levellers	28
Milton	28
"Tenure of Kings and Magistrates"	28
Popular element in Milton's philosophy	29
Advanced character of Milton's thought	29
Failure of the revolution in England	30
Tendency towards aristocratic legitimacy	30
Growth of monarchic legitimacy.	30
Bodin and sovereignty	31
Politique ideal of Bodin	32
Grotius and the development of absolutism	32
Natural law the basis of Grotius' theories	33
Contract theory.	33
Sovereignty not located in the people	34

	PAGE
Sovereignty and the international system of Grotius	34
Civil war and the right to rebel	35
The usurper and the right of resistance	36
Legitimation of the usurper	37
Grotius and the new public law system of Europe.	37
Development of revolutionary and absolutist doctrines	38
Pufendorf.	38
Legitimation of usurpers	39
Barbeyrac and the de facto principle	39
Why a recognition question did not develop	40
Vattel	41
Legitimacy excluded from international law	41
Influence of Vattel	42
Later developments	43

CHAPTER II

THE THEORY OF RECOGNITION

Changes in state and formal wrong	44
Early writers	44
Municipal and international law solutions	44
Nature of the recognition problem.	45
Original conception of recognition	45
Legitimacy as a counter theory	45
Place of recognition in international theory	46
A state cannot have juristic origin.	46
New state in a transitional legal stage	47
Changes in existing régime are legitimized at municipal law	47
The two constituent factors in law.	47
Normative force of facts.	47
Breach in municipal law is healed chiefly by virtue of this principle.	48
Natural law.	48
It is the idealistic element in law	49
Nature of the struggle between legitimism and de facto-ism. . . .	50
Theoretic difficulties of legitimation	51
Significance of this municipal law legitimation for international law.	51
Rapidity of the legitimizing process	51
Simultaneous breach in international order	51
The historical element.	52
Status of the new state in international law is one where law is in-	52
determinate.	52
The nature of this indeterminability	53
Problem of state succession	54
No inheritance of former international obligations	54

	PAGE
A new state may assume such obligations	55
Significance of the recognition process to the new state	55
Not constitutive or legitimizing	55
Necessity of international relations	56
Self-imposed nature of international rules	56
Character of international norms	57
Customary law	57
Agreements	57
Adherence to customary law	58
How the legal community is produced from the de facto	58
Formal declaration is unnecessary	58
Normative force of the de facto	59
Recognition of a new state not an admission into a society	60
Merely an attempt to reestablish status quo	60
Objection to a constitutive theory	60
Participation by other states	61
The secondary effects	61
Recognition not an agreement	62
Nature of international agreements	62
Psychological process in recognition	63
Recognition cannot be withdrawn	63
Not a declaration of status	64
Conditional recognition	65
Recognition of governments	65
De facto principles vs. de jure principle of governmental recognition	66
Legitimacy and recognition of governments	67
Recognition of governments should be limited	67

PART II

CHAPTER III

INTERVENTION AND RECOGNITION IN THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION

Character of American diplomacy	71
Its effect upon the old public law system of Europe	71
The recognition problem and the war of independence	72
Recognition not a concept either of law or of diplomacy of that time	72
Character of the public law system of Europe	73
The policy of France toward Great Britain following the Seven Years War	74
Vergennes	74
His European and American policy	75
Memoranda of Vergennes and Maurepas	75

	PAGE
Turgot and the Revolution	76
Congress sends representative to France	77
Silas Deane's instructions.	77
Deane's powers very limited.	78
Deane commences negotiations	78
Interview with Vergennes.	79
Changes in French policy.	80
Attempts to influence the King	80
Deane's treaty project.	81
Congress organizes a regular commission	81
The instructions to the new commission	82
No instructions as to treaty of alliance.	82
Franklin commences his diplomatic activity	83
Deane and commercial transactions	83
Lee's " militia diplomacy "	83
Interviews with Vergennes and d'Aranda	83
New instructions to the commissioner,	84
Franklin's memorandum	85
The recognition question in the negotiations.	86
Negotiations with Spain	86
Lee and his Prussian mission	88
New demands for French intervention.	89
Protests by Great Britain	89
Effect of Burgoyne's defeat	90
Recognition movement in Great Britain.	90
France decides to intervene in behalf of the colonies	91
Treaties of alliance and commerce signed	92
Nature of the negotiations with France	93
Negotiations with other countries	93
Diplomatic activities in Holland.	94
Adams secures recognition by the States General	95
Summary.	95

CHAPTER IV

JEFFERSON AND THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE RECOGNITION DOCTRINE

Influence of Revolutionary political thinking upon American diplomacy	97
Effect of establishment of Constitution	97
Jefferson's influence on our foreign policies	98
Jefferson the originator of the recognition doctrine.	98
The place of recognition in Jefferson's political thought	98
Jefferson's political philosophy	99
The Declaration of Independence	99

	PAGE
Jefferson's doctrine of revolution	100
The Revolution in France.	101
Instructions to Morris	102
Payment of debt to France	103
Instruction to Pinckney.	104
The French Minister received and the Republic recognized	105
Washington's questions	105
Hamilton's memorandum	107
Jefferson's reply	109
Jefferson's conception of the significance of recognition	110
Hamilton the originator of the doctrine of non-intervention	111
Washington accedes to Jefferson's views.	112
Recognition of later changes in the French government	113
The recognition of Napoleonic states	114

CHAPTER V

THE RECOGNITION OF THE SPANISH AMERICAN STATES

Sympathy in the United States with Spanish America	116
Revolutionary activity in the Spanish colonies	117
Monroe's instructions to Barlow.	117
Madison's message	118
The resolution of Congress	118
Discontinuance of our early policy toward Spanish America	118
Declaration of Independence by Buenos Ayres	119
Commissioners sent to Latin America.	119
Preliminary cabinet discussions	120
Adams' influence on our recognition policy	121
South American agents sue for recognition	121
Attitude of the Administration	122
Adams' report to Congress	122
Clay's first opposition.	123
Congress supports the Administration	124
International complications	124
Jackson in Florida	125
Protests of Spain	125
Attempt to act with European powers	126
Attitude of Great Britain and France	127
The Florida Treaty	128
Spain refuses to ratify.	129
Spain attempts to prevent recognition by the United States.	129
Adams refuses to change his position	130
Effect of Spanish policy upon the attitude of the United States	131
Clay's second opposition	131

	PAGE
Rivalry between Clay and Adams	132
Clay's defeat	133
The Florida Treaty ratified	133
Jackson's mismanagement in Florida	134
New demands for recognition	134
The President's message of March 8, 1822	135
Recognition is decided upon.	136
The Spanish Minister protests.	136
Colombia is recognized	138
Recognition of other Latin American states	138
Recognition of Brazil	139
Summary.	140

CHAPTER VI

THE RECOGNITION OF TEXAS AND THE GROWTH OF THE DE FACTO PRINCIPLE

Character of the Texas Revolution.	144
Attempts to enlist sympathy.	145
Commission sent to the United States	145
Popular enthusiasm in the United States.	145
The Mexican Government protests.	146
The Second Texan Commission	146
Activities of this Commission	147
Demand for recognition.	147
The relations between the United States and Mexico become more strained.	148
The Sabine River affair	148
The recognition question comes up in Congress	149
Clay prevents premature recognition.	149
Outline of our policy	150
Resolution of Congress	151
Jackson sends an agent to Texas.	152
Activities in the House of Representatives.	152
The Third Texan Commission	153
Santa Anna and the negotiations	154
Jackson refuses to interfere	154
Gaines crosses the Sabine	155
Mexico renews her protests	155
Gorostiza pamphlet	156
Troubles at Mexico City	156
Diplomatic relations severed.	157
Jackson's special message to Congress.	157
Congress delays action.	160

	PAGE
New representatives sent by Texas	160
The attitude of foreign governments.	160
Santa Anna comes to Washington.	161
The Senate decides on recognition.	162
Action of the House.	162
Jackson's claims message decides in favor of recognition	163
Recognition accomplished.	164
Mexico protests.	165
Diplomatic relations again severed.	166
Jackson's attitude.	166
Further developments in our recognition policy	167
The Revolutions of 1848.	168
The Mann mission to Hungary	168
Protests by Austria	169
The Hülsemann correspondence.	169

CHAPTER VII

CIVIL WAR AND REACTION

The Civil War marks a change from early policies	171
Attitude of the State Department toward the Confederacy	172
Commission sent to Washington	173
The Confederacy requests recognition by the United States.	173
Seward's attitude and reply	173
Seward's foreign policy	174
His foreign war scheme.	175
Great Britain aware of Seward's attitude.	176
Lord Russell warns Lord Lyons.	176
Seward's memorandum	177
Lincoln rejects Seward's scheme	178
Estimation of these schemes.	178
Attempts to prevent recognition by foreign states	179
Seward re-enforces earlier instructions.	180
Relations with Great Britain	180
Russell promises not to recognize prematurely	181
Seward dissatisfied with British policy	182
Confederate delegates arrive in London	182
England proposes to act in concert with France	182
The British declaration of neutrality	183
Seward's interpretation of the proclamation	183
Seward's attitude perplexing.	184
Adams instructed to inform British government to cease inter- course with the Confederate agents	184

	PAGE
Lincoln's amendments to this despatch	185
New protests by the United States.	186
Seward refuses to receive communications regarding recognition of Southern belligerency	187
Negotiations with France	188
France recognizes Confederates as belligerents.	188
More temperate attitude of United States toward France	189
The Trent affair.	190
Change in Seward's attitude.	190
Recognition becomes a question of intervention	190
Summary.	191

CHAPTER VIII

DEVELOPMENTS SINCE 1865

Influence of Seward's policy.	193
The intervention of France in Mexico	194
Attitude of the United States	194
House protests against Seward's action	195
Resolution of the House lost in the Senate	195
Effect of this protest upon the administration	195
The character of Seward's new policy	198
Instructions to General Hovey.	199
A breaking away from old traditions.	200
Seward's policy a lapse to legitimacy	201
Instructions to our minister in Peru	202
The Diaz Government in Mexico is recognized	203
Fish disregards Seward's policy	203
The insurrection in Cuba	204
Grant's message	204
New changes in Peruvian government are recognized	205
Subordination of internal considerations to international relations.	207
Changes during the last twenty-five years	208
The recognition of change in Brazil, Chile, Venezuela and Ecuador.	208
Final reversion to defacto-ism	209
Its effect upon our policy	210
The Panama intervention	212
Colombian protests	215
Recent developments	217
CONCLUSION	219

PART I

