

Acknowledgments

ONLY those who have had the privilege of close association with Professor Philip E. Mosely can appreciate the measure of gratitude that is owed him. His patient and precise guidance, even in the midst of a whirlwind of distracting pressures, almost exceeds belief. In the writing of the present work his contribution has been invaluable, thanks to his knowledge and judgment as a scholar, while his painstaking and skillful editorial suggestions resulted in a sharpening and a substantial shortening of the text. For all this I can only express my heartfelt appreciation.

At the inception of this study a number of years ago Professor Frederick C. Barghoorn showed a warm and lively interest which the author has not forgotten. In the latter stages of writing Professor Henry L. Roberts, Director of the Russian Institute, was both kind and helpful in smoothing out some troublesome textual wrinkles and in negotiating the publication arrangements. For their thoughtful, and sometimes elaborate, critique of the manuscript at various stages of preparation, my thanks also go to Professor Alexander Dallin, Professor Harold H. Fisher, Professor Leland M. Goodrich, and Professor Kenneth Waltz. I naturally assume full responsibility for the final shape of the text, including the conclusions and opinions that are not specifically attributed to others.

Various chapters draw upon material that appeared in a modified form in the Journal of Politics and the Russian Review. The author wishes to express his gratitude to the editors of these journals for their consent to incorporate such passages in this book.

As every researcher knows, librarians are the truly unsung heroes of the scholar's world, and I wish to thank the numerous librarians, especially at Butler Library of Columbia University, the Slavonic Division of the New York Public Library, and the John Hay Library of Brown University, for their quiet and tireless assistance in tracing down many rare but important items.

A word of appreciation is also surely due my colleagues at Brown University, and in particular Professor Guy Howard Dodge, for a sympathetic understanding of the birth pangs involved in getting this work to press. Special mention must also be made of the many kindnesses rendered me during the writing process by Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Feinberg of New York. Finally, this book would scarcely have been conceivable without the sustained encouragement of my father, Lazure L. Goodman. Nor could this work ever have been brought to a conclusion without the constant support of my wife, Norma Goodman, whose contributions ranged from help in the formulation of ideas to secretarial drudgery, as well as the numerous wifely ministrations beyond calculation.

ELLIOT R. GOODMAN

Brown University
Providence, Rhode Island
August, 1959