The transliteration from the Cyrillic is based on the Library of Congress system with some modifications. The spelling of Slavic names that appear in quotations from English-language texts has likewise been brought into conformity with this system. However, some names have been retained in their common English forms. Thus Trotsky, for example, has not been rendered Trotskii.

For the sake of uniformity, all dates have been transposed into the Gregorian (New Style) calendar, which the Soviet government adopted on February 14, 1918. Where several dates appear in a footnote reference, the first indicates the date on which the work was written or, if this is unavailable, the date on which it was first published. The date appearing within the parentheses indicates the time of publication of the edition cited.

Unless otherwise noted, Lenin, Sochineniia, refers to the third Russian edition of Lenin's collected works (Moscow, 1934-1935). The first, second, and fourth editions have been checked for textual variations and omissions relevant to the topic. Stalin, Sochineniia, refers to the Russian edition of Stalin's collected works (Moscow, 1946-1951).

Italics within quotations are as in the original texts except as indicated. British spellings within quotations have been adapted to American usage.

The Russian Institute of Columbia University

THE Russian Institute was established by Columbia University in 1946 to serve two major objectives: the training of a limited number of well-qualified Americans for scholarly and professional careers in the field of Russian studies, and the development of research in the social sciences and the humanities as they relate to Russia and the Soviet Union. The research program of the Russian Institute is conducted through the efforts of its faculty members, of scholars invited to participate as Senior Fellows in its program, and of candidates for the Certificate of the Institute and for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. Some of the results of the research program are presented in the Studies of the Russian Institute of Columbia University. The faculty of the Institute, without necessarily agreeing with the conclusions reached in the Studies, believe that their publication advances the difficult task of promoting systematic research on Russia and the Soviet Union and public understanding of the problems involved.

The faculty of the Russian Institute are grateful to the Rockefeller Foundation for the financial assistance which it has given to the program of research and publication.
