

Acknowledgments

I am grateful for help given me by numerous persons both here and abroad. I wish especially to thank those individuals who consented to be interviewed or to grant me access to their private papers; their names are indicated in the Bibliography.

Like every author, I am indebted to many librarians, especially those of the Columbia University Libraries, the Library of Congress, and librarians and archivists in Bonn, Berlin, and elsewhere.

The Ford Foundation, Barnard College, the University of Connecticut Research Foundation, and the Deutsche Akademischer Austauschdienst (DAAD) helped me financially.

Colleagues at several universities were generous in giving me useful criticism and friendly advice; of the many who gave of their time I should like to mention my dissertation sponsor, Alexander Dallin, and Loren R. Graham. The Columbia University Press and especially its Chief Copy Editor, Joan McQuary, have saved a neophyte author from many errors. My wife, June, knows better than even I how essential her support has been. Full responsibility for the errors remaining in this work is solely my own.
