ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

he contents and ideas of the book draw a great deal upon my experience of teaching about art, cinema, and philosophy as the course leader of the MRes Art: Theory and Philosophy course at Central Saint Martins, University of the Arts, London, and I'm especially grateful to colleagues and students on the course who have contributed to my thinking and writing about these subjects. I'd like to thank my college for the investment that it has put into developing this book, awarding me a sabbatical term of research study as well as grants to cover the copyright purchases and to curate a program of films and discussions at the Close-Up Film Centre in London in July 2018 that drew upon the ideas of the book. I'd like to thank Damien Sanville, the director of Close-Up Film Centre, and Oliver Dickens, the program and events manager at the center, for this opportunity as well as for their generosity in allowing me open access to the center's extensive film collection. I'm especially thankful to the editorial team at CUP—Wendy Lochner, Susan Pensak, and Lowell Frye—for their advice and help throughout the production of this book. Additionally, I'm grateful to Hilary Knox for her assistance in collating the primary texts of the book and Murad Khan for his help with the final proofing of the manuscript. Most of all, I would like to thank my partner, Catherine Yass, for her support throughout this project.
