Contents

I.	INTRODUCTION	1
•	The machine and leisure; Definition of leisure; Subjective aspects; Increasing amount of leisure; Disruption of traditional leisure pursuits; Resulting problems; Neglect of subject by social scientists; Reasons; Traditional attitudes; The new situation; Leisure as an object of scientific study; The relation of wealth to welfare; The relativity of needs and wants; The economist's preoccupation with production; Competitive consumption; Social and economic coercion in modern leisure pursuits; Characteristics of true leisure; The relation of leisure behavior to other aspects of life; Problems; Approach of the present study.	•
и.	Physical and historical aspects of Westchester County; Suburban migration; From wilderness to the richest suburb in the world; The communities of Westchester; The principal types of suburb; Transportation; Commuting; The population; Income, occupation, nativity, age composition, marital status, etc.; The wealthy residential suburb; The relatively poor residential suburb; The mixed suburb or satellite city; Dependence on parent city; Is the suburban dweller a special sociological type?; Westchester as a community; The basis of community consciousness; Economic and political factors; Wealth; Multiplicity of governmental units; Resulting overlapping and costs; Political control; Public administration and policy.	24
π.	THE ORGANIZATION OF LEISURE	58

Horse and dog shows; Children's organizations and play-grounds; Organized play; Indoor, intellectual, artistic, and ceremonial leisure pursuits; Commercial recreation; Eating and dancing; The movies; Pool, billiards, and minor indoor sports; The amusement park; Conclusions on the organization and pecuniary basis of leisure; Satisfactions and needs in current leisure; The influence of public provision for leisure.

ities; Qualitative differences; "Good time" patterns;

Summary and conclusion.

V. SUBURBAN ORGANIZATIONS AND LEISURE The increasing importance of voluntary organizations as leisure-time institutions; Number of organizations and extent of participation in a well-to-do residential suburb: Is the suburb over-organized?: Overlapping of membership: Who belongs to suburban clubs?: Economic. racial, and sex factors in the extent of participation; Club membership and social stratification; The sharp contrast between the well-to-do and the poor residential suburb in the extent of organization; Some suburban-rural comparisons: Aims and activities of suburban clubs: The wellto-do and the poor suburb contrasted; Case studies of principal types of suburban clubs; The women's club, the pride of suburban women; The literary club, the cultural tradition; The Service League, philanthropy and social service; The country club; The village club, suburban gentlemen politicians; Conclusion.

87

126

VI.	THE SUBURBAN FAMILY AND LEISURE	170
vII.	outside the home. Summary. THE SUBURBAN CHURCH AND LEISURE	190
vIII.	The prominence of the school in the suburb; Costs, equipment, progressive policies; Educational objectives; Curricular training for leisure; Music; Other arts; Extra-curricular activities; School clubs; Athletics; The school and the leisure of the community; Uses of school equipment by adults; The strategic position of the school in the leisure of the community; Growing recognition of avocational training; Basic problems.	218
IX.	THE ARTS AND LEISURE	253

	Home music; The radio; Who belong to amateur musical organizations; Sex, age, education, occupations; Informal music making; Effects of the radio; The music festival; Painting; Sculpture; The crafts; Facilities and participation; Westchester Workshop; Reactions of participants; The drama; The motion picture; The little theater; The dance; Relation of the Recreation Commission to the development of art as leisure pursuit; The "fine" arts as "useful" arts; The therapeutic and socializing value of the arts.
x.	ADULT EDUCATION AND READING	307
XI.	Conditions making leisure a community problem like education or public health; Reasons for the lag in public provision for leisure; Traditional attitude toward leisure; Glorification of work; Individual wealth no longer insures major satisfactions; Need of social inventions and community effort; Changing attitude as to proper sphere of governmental activity; The police power; "Private" community action; History of public provision for recreation; Present extent; The problem of finance; The nature of public economy.	345
жи.	CONCLUSION	363
APPEN	DICES
	_	373
	B. Tables and Charts on Population	379
SELECT	TED BIBLIOGRAPHY	387
INDEX		391