

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments ix

1 The Cultural Turn 1

- 1.1 Do the Right Thing: Aesthetics and the Politics of Perception 1
- 1.2 The Cultural Turn in Politics 18
- 1.3 The Cultural Turn in Art 26
- 1.4 Conclusion: A Return to Hegel 42

2 Rethinking the Claims of Culture: “Offensiveness” in the Rushdie Affair and Beyond 49

- 2.1 The Satanic Verses: Politics and the Aesthetics of Literature 49
- 2.2 Contesting Literary Content 53
- 2.3 Contesting Literary Form 59
- 2.4 Literature as Cultural Claim 63
- 2.5 A Question of Cultural Authority 69
- 2.6 Conclusion: Expanding the Public Sphere 93

3 Imagining Agency: Self-Determination and the Experience of Art 95

- 3.1 The Liberal Imagination, Reimagined 95

3.2	Cultural Narratives	98
3.3	Aesthetic Reflexivity	107
3.4	The “Appearance” of Art: Reflective or Reflexive?	113
3.5	What Is the Purpose of Purposiveness?	124
3.6	Conclusion: The Social Self	141
4	The Aesthetics of Recognition	143
4.1	Recognition and the Politics of Perception	143
4.2	The Problem of Subjectivity (Then) vs. the Problem of Identity (Now)	148
4.3	Imagination and Aesthetic Reflexivity	158
4.4	Affirming Identity: The Paintings of Kehinde Wiley	164
4.5	Conclusion: A Cultural Turn Too Far?	170
5	Imagination and Interpretation After the “End of Art”	173
5.1	The Aesthetics of Indeterminacy	173
5.2	How Indeterminate Is Kantian “Indeterminacy”?	176
5.3	The End of Art: Or, Art Emancipated	191
5.4	The “Necessary Anachronism” of Art	205
5.5	Conclusion: The Interrelation of Political and Aesthetic Value	216

Notes 229

Bibliography 257

Index 269