

Contents

| | |
|---|-----|
| Foreword by Edmund deS. Brunner | v |
| I. Introducing the Farmers' Leisure-Time Program | 3 |
| II. How the Program Grew | 8 |
| III. Patterns of Work | 15 |
| IV. The Part That Drama Plays | 20 |
| V. Drama Festivals in Wisconsin | 24 |
| VI. The Little Country Theatre in North Dakota | 35 |
| VII. Informal Drama in Community Planning in Ohio and New York | 51 |
| VIII. The Making of Native Folk Drama in North Carolina | 67 |
| IX. An Integrated Arts Program in the University of Colorado | 81 |
| X. Corn, Hogs, and Opera in Iowa | 92 |
| XI. The Part That Music Plays | 110 |
| XII. A Leadership Training Center at Jackson's Mill, West Virginia | 117 |
| XIII. An Experiment in Regional Planning at Oglebay Park, Wheeling, West Virginia | 127 |
| XIV. The Little Stringed People Play Their Parts | 136 |
| XV. Farmers Write Their Own Plays | 143 |
| XVI. The Importance of Folk Events | 152 |
| XVII. Hobbies | 160 |
| XVIII. Arts and Crafts | 169 |
| XIX. Art Exhibits in Rural Galleries | 177 |
| XX. Radio Has Its Place in the Program | 180 |
| XXI. Some of the Problems | 184 |
| XXII. Conclusion | 197 |

