

TABLE OF CONTENTS

CHAPTER I

THE PROPRIETORSHIP IN LAND

PAGE

Distinction between the proprietorship as a form of land ownership and as a grant of governmental power—Origin of the proprietorship—Efforts of the Duke of York to recover New Jersey—The sale of Berkeley's interest to the Friends—Reconveyance of East Jersey from the Duke of York to Carteret—Transactions among the proprietors of West Jersey—The Quintipartite Deed—Final loss of West Jersey by James of York—Development of the West Jersey proprietorship—The investment of Dr. Daniel Coxe—The West New Jersey Society—The Twenty-four Proprietors of East Jersey—Further development of the East Jersey proprietorship—Quarrel between the Scots Proprietors and William Dockwra . .	24
--	----

CHAPTER II

SOURCES AND CHARACTER OF THE POPULATION OF THE JERSEYS

Failure of Dutch colonization—East Jersey settled from New England—The three zones of colonization—Emigration from Scotland under the twenty-four proprietors—Character of the settlers of West Jersey	29
--	----

CHAPTER III

THE LAND SYSTEM OF EAST JERSEY

Treatment of the Dutch settlers by Berkeley and Carteret—The Concessions and Agreements of the Lords Proprietors—The execution of the Concessions rendered difficult by the character of the settlers—Conflict between the proprietors and the settlers—The provisions of the Concessions finally carried out—Nature of the apportionment of the land under Carteret—The Concessions continued by the twenty-four proprietors—The institution of the Board of Proprietors—Character of the proprietary officers—Comparatively large size of the proprietary holdings—Efforts of the new proprietors to conciliate the settlers—Relation of the assembly to the land system—Steps of the proprietors immediately preceding the institution of royal rule	57
---	----

CHAPTER IV

PAGE

LAND TROUBLES IN EAST JERSEY

Popular misunderstanding of the land troubles in East Jersey—The real issues—Legal principles involved—The Monmouth patent—Temporary settlement of the questions arising out of it—The Elizabethtown controversy—Insufficient character of the evidence—Early anti-proprietary disturbances—Measures of the proprietors—Effects of the Dutch reconquest—Re-establishment of the proprietary authority—Attitude of the twenty-four proprietors toward the Monmouth and Elizabethtown questions—The case of Jones vs. Fullerton—Revival of anti-proprietary agitation—The "Revolution" 80

CHAPTER V

POLITICAL CONDITIONS IN EAST JERSEY UNDER THE PROPRIETORS

Uncertainty of the proprietors' claims to governmental power—Political features of the concessions—The establishment of the proprietary government—The first assembly—Subversion of the proprietary government—Collapse of the anti-proprietary movement—The development of difference of opinion between the governor and the assembly—Conciliatory policy of the Twenty-four proprietors—The Fundamental Constitutions—Attitude of the people toward the rule of Andros—The dismissal of Governor Hamilton—Unfortunate policy of Basse—Downfall of the proprietary system 96

CHAPTER VI

THE LAND SYSTEM OF WEST JERSEY

Institution of the system of tenths and proprietries—The Concessions and Agreements—Efforts to carry out the Concessions and Agreements—Gradual modification of the system—The institution of the Council of Proprietors—Nature of the apportionment of the land—New elements introduced by the West Jersey Society—Unimportant character of land disputes in West Jersey as compared with those of East Jersey—New projects of the proprietors. 112

CHAPTER VII

POLITICAL CONDITIONS IN WEST JERSEY UNDER THE PROPRIETORS

Political provisions of the Concessions and Agreements—Interference by James of York and Edward Byllinge—Readjustment under Samuel Jennings as governor—Dealings between the as-

TABLE OF CONTENTS

ix

	PAGE
sembly and Byllinge—The arbitration of 1684—Defeat of the assembly—Plans of Dr. Daniel Coxe—The power of government passes to the West Jersey Society—Development of parties under Hamilton and Basse	124

CHAPTER VIII

RELATIONS WITH THE DUKE OF YORK AND THE CROWN

Legal invalidity of the claim of Berkeley and Carteret to governmental power over New Jersey—Inability of James of York to prevent the establishment of their government—Effects of the Dutch reconquest—Relations between Andros and the authorities of the Jerseys—The arbitration of Sir William Jones and its results—Dealings between Governor Dongan and the twenty-four proprietors—The Jerseys brought under the rule of Andros—The resumption of proprietary rule—Controversy between Lord Bello-mont and Governor Basse—Determination of the crown to as-sume jurisdiction over the Jerseys—Surrender of the proprietors.	138
---	-----

CHAPTER IX

THE ROYAL GOVERNORS

Unsuccessful efforts to secure the appointment of Colonel Hamilton—Edward, Lord Cornbury—John, Lord Lovelace—Colonel Rich-ard Ingoldsby—Colonel Robert Hunter—William Burnet—John Montgomerie—William Cosby	147
---	-----

CHAPTER X

LEGAL POSITION OF THE GOVERNOR AS EXECUTIVE

Power conveyed by the governors' commissions—The royal in-structions—Financial powers of the governor—His judicial powers—Religious control—Military power—Relation of the governor to trade and commerce—Relations between the governor and the proprietors—Information to be furnished by the governor—Addi-tional instructions to the governors—Limitation of the executive power by legislation	165
---	-----

CHAPTER XI

THE EXECUTIVE POWER IN PRACTICAL OPERATION

Effects of the union with New York upon the executive power in New Jersey—Executive abuses of Cornbury's administration—Corruption checked by Lord Lovelace—Cornbury's regime continued by Ingoldsby—Hunter reorganizes the administration— His conflict with Cornbury's ring—Success of Hunter—The policy of Hunter continued by Burnet—Difference between the administrations of Hunter and Burnet—No positive policies de- veloped by Montgomerie and Cosby	220
--	--

	PAGE

CHAPTER XII

THE GOVERNOR IN LEGISLATION

Legal control of the governor over the legislature—Part taken by him in its proceedings—Differences in the degree of influence pos- sessed by the various governors—Failure of Cornbury to control the assembly—Influence held by Lovelace—Some success gained by Ingoldsby—Powerful influence of Hunter upon the assemblies —Burnet's difficulties and final success—Montgomerie not en- tirely successful—The success of Cosby greater in New Jersey than in New York	231
--	-----

CHAPTER XIII

THE MOVEMENT FOR A SEPARATE GOVERNOR

Union with New York never really popular in New Jersey—Corn- bury's neglect of New Jersey—The demand for separation brought forward by Colonel Daniel Coxe—Growth of the desire for sep- aration—Unfortunate attempts of Montgomerie to check the movement—Efforts of Lewis Morris—Effect of the feeling for separation upon Governor Cosby—The work of President Ander- son and council and of the provincial agent—A separate execu- tive finally granted	242
--	-----

CHAPTER XIV

OTHER EXECUTIVE OFFICERS

The Lieutenant-Governor—Purpose of the office—Difficulties aris- ing out of it—Its abolition.
The President of the Council—Creation of the post—Lewis Morris becomes president—His difficulties with Cornbury and Ingoldsby His two administrations—Administration of Colonel Anderson— Accession of Colonel John Hamilton—His conflict with Morris.
Patent Officers of the crown—The provincial secretary—The attorney general.
Officers commissioned by the governor—Commissioners named by the assembly—Agents of the proprietors	258

TABLE OF CONTENTS

xi

CHAPTER XV

PAGE

THE COUNCIL—PERSONNEL

Both parties represented in the first royal council—A majority obtained by the anti-proprietary party—The suspension of Morris and the retirement of Jennings—Formation of Lord Cornbury's "ring"—Col. Daniel Coxe and Peter Sonmans the leading members—Changes upon the accession of Lovelace—Cornbury's clique continued in power by Ingoldsby—Blindness of the Lords of Trade—Hunter recommends the destruction of Cornbury's ring—The reorganization of the council at length effected—Later changes—The high character of the council maintained—Futile efforts of Cosby to obtain the dismissal of Morris and Alexander. 279

CHAPTER XVI

THE COUNCIL—ITS LEGAL POSITION

The legal position of the council in New Jersey similar to that of the councils of other royal provinces—Powers of the council as set forth in the governors' commissions—Its work more exactly stated in the instructions—Number of its members—Division of its membership between East and West Jersey—Legal privileges of the council—Extent of the governor's control over its membership—Its advice and consent needed by the governor for the performance of many executive acts—Judicial duties of the council—Its reserve powers—The legal position of the council remains substantially unchanged during the union period 285

CHAPTER XVII

THE COUNCIL IN ADMINISTRATION

Difficulty of understanding the nature of the council's proceedings—The council as a rule dominated by the governor—Frequency and length of council sessions—Functions of the council at the beginning of new administrations—Financial duties of the council—Powers over the courts—The supervision of subordinate executive officers—Laxity of its control—General police powers of the council—Its advisory functions—The council as an administrative "ring" 295

CHAPTER XVIII

THE COUNCIL IN LEGISLATION

The council as upper house of the provincial legislature—Simplicity of its legislative methods—The council the mouthpiece of the governor in legislation—Its early efforts to assume superiority over the assembly—Its claims to be a secret board—Defeat of the council—Theoretical equality and real inferiority of the council to the assembly under the later governors—Harmony between council and assembly—The superior experience of the council recognized by the assembly—The control of the assembly over the public purse established in practice—Activity of the council in drawing up addresses to the crown and to the governors . . .	306

	PAGE

CHAPTER XIX

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY—PERSONNEL

General character of the representatives—The first assembly under proprietary control—Strength of the parties in the second assembly—Powerful character of the third assembly—Varying strength of the parties under Lovelace and Ingoldsby—Hunter's first assembly under proprietary control—Col. Coxe speaker of the seventh assembly—Expulsion of Coxe and his followers—Governor Hunter becomes the real leader—Fading away of the old party lines under Burnet—Permanence of membership in the later assemblies—The rise to influence of John Kinsey . . .	316
--	-----

CHAPTER XX

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY—CONSTITUTION AND LEGAL POWER

The original constitution and powers of the assembly based upon the governor's commission and instructions—Powers of the assembly as stated in Cornbury's commission—Provisions of his instructions relating to the assembly—Further power and privileges of the representatives based upon English and Colonial precedents—Unsuccessful efforts of Cornbury and his supporters to change the constitution of the assembly—The constitution of the house altered by an additional instruction—The alteration confirmed by provincial legislation under Lord Lovelace—Further changes under Ingoldsby—Difficulties resulting for Governor Hunter—Eventual settlement of the questions involved—A transfer of representatives recommended by Burnet—The opinion of the attorney-general—The change effected—The act of 1725 regulating elections—Passage of a triennial act secured by John Kinsey—Its disallowance—Kinsey's act for the freedom of assemblies . . .	332
--	-----

TABLE OF CONTENTS

xiii

CHAPTER XXI

PAGE

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY IN ACTION

Frequency of sessions—Length of assemblies—Places of meeting—Officers of the assembly—Procedure at the opening of assemblies—Methods of legislation—Importance of the control of the budget—Other financial powers—The assembly as the mouth-piece for the expression of grievances—Disputed elections—The assembly's power of determining the qualifications of its members—Discipline over members—Expulsion—Tendency of the House to enlarge its sphere of action at the expense of the executive—The assembly controls the colonial agency 376

CHAPTER XXII

EXECUTIVE AND LEGISLATIVE IN CONFLICT

Apparent harmony at the beginning of royal rule—Quarrel between Cornbury and the proprietary party—The "Blind Tax"—Resulting dissolution of the first assembly—The exclusion of the three Quaker members from the second assembly—Temporary control of the anti-proprietary party—Cornbury loses control of the representatives—Resulting attacks upon the governor—The great Remonstrance of 1707—Cornbury's answer—The reply of the House—Continued conflict—Lovelace well received by the assembly—Attack by the assembly upon the council—Renewed conflicts under Ingoldsby—His efforts to cast the blame upon the Friends—The fifth assembly favorable to Ingoldsby—Quarrel about the title "General Assembly"—The early attitude of Hunter conciliatory—He is supported by the assembly and thwarted by the council—Cornbury's ring driven from the council—Triumph of the proprietary party—The seventh assembly controlled by Col. Coxe—Conflict between Hunter and the assembly—Defeat and expulsion of Coxe and his supporters—Harmony between the governor and the legislature at length re-established—Quarrel between Burnet and the representatives—Burnet's eventual success with the assembly—Conflict between Montgomerie and the assembly over separation from New York—Montgomerie corrected by the Lords of Trade—Serious trouble with the legislature avoided by Cosby—Conclusions 457

CHAPTER XXIII

THE JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The System of Courts—Arrangements under the proprietary governments—Success of Cornbury's administration in reorganizing the courts—Legislation under Hunter affecting the system— Later alterations in the courts—Activity of Burnet in this field.

	PAGE
The Personnel of the Courts—Roger Mompesson—William Pin- borne—Alexander Griffith—David Jamison—Thomas Farmer— William Trent—Robert Lettice Hooper.
The Courts in Action—Corruption and injustice of the courts under Cornbury—The injustice checked by Lovelace—Bad effects of the accession of Ingoldsby—The reformation of the courts by Hunter —Important prosecutions of public officers—The land question in the courts—The case of Vaughan vs. Woodruff —The Schuyler case—The judicial work of the council	501

CHAPTER XXIV

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS

Expenditure—The payment of salaries the chief regular source of expense—Efforts of Cornbury to obtain high salaries—Difficulties caused by the death of Lovelace—A fairly permanent scale of salaries established under Hunter—Grants for longer periods in- sisted upon by Burnet—The question of the appropriation of the interest money from the loan offices—The colonial view adopted by Burnet and Montgomerie—Other expenditures—Outlay for the expeditions to Canada.
Taxation—The system established under Cornbury—Its chief fea- tures followed in later acts—Methods of apportioning and collect- ing taxes—County and local taxes levied under provincial acts— Import and export duties—The excise—Serious difficulties in the collection of taxes.
The Bills of Credit—Their first issue the result of the expeditions against Canada—Early difficulties with the bills—A new issue forced by the difficulties of taxation—The establishment of the loan offices in 1723—The second and third loan-office acts—Atti- tude of the later governors—Position of the home government	558

CHAPTER XXV

THE MILITIA SYSTEM

General inefficiency of the militia—The political importance of the militia question increased by the presence of Quakerism—Military powers of the governor—The Quakers attacked by Cornbury and his supporters through the militia act of 1704—Resulting diffi- culties—A milder system established under Hunter—Military activity of Burnet—His failure to gain important results—Weak- ness of the militia at the end of the period—New Jersey's contri- butions during Queen Anne's War.	579
---	-----

TABLE OF CONTENTS

XV

CHAPTER XXVI

PAGE

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND IN THE JERSEYS

Religious coloring in the political struggles of the colony—Beginnings of Anglicanism in the Jerseys—The work of George Keith—His efforts continued by Rev. John Talbot—Relations between Cornbury and the missionaries—Efforts to make Burlington the seat of an American bishop—Hunter's quarrel with the high church party—Defeat of Talbot and his supporters—Progress made by the Church—Talbot consecrated as a bishop by the Non-Jurors—The end of his career—The Church well established at the end of the period 601

CHAPTER XXVII

THE PROPRIETORSHIP UNDER ROYAL RULE—EAST JERSEY

Opposing interests in the East Jersey proprietorship—Belief of the proprietors that they had surrendered on conditions—Early harmony between Cornbury and the proprietors—The "Long Bill"—Break between Cornbury and the proprietary party—Practical suspension of the council of proprietors—Conflict between the proprietors and Cornbury—Struggle in England between the West Jersey Society and William Dockwra—Claims of Sonmans as general agent of the proprietors—He is recognized by Cornbury—Work of the proprietors in securing Cornbury's removal—The proprietors favored by Lovelace—Their efforts checked by Ingoldsby—Hunter allies himself with the proprietors—Overthrow of Sonmans, Basse and Col. Coxe—Revival of proprietary activity—The case of Vaughan vs. Woodruff—Effect upon the people of Elizabethtown—Dispute with West Jersey over the partition line—George Keith's line—The Barclay-Coxe agreement—The "Greenland award"—The act of assembly for running the line—Failure of the act—The boundary dispute with New York—Burnet's attitude toward the proprietorship—His quarrel with Johnstone and Willocks—The revival of the council of proprietors—Nature of its organization and proceedings—Relations with Montgomerie and Cosby—The proprietorship weakened by the withdrawal of Lewis Morris—Futile efforts to adjust the question of the division line with West Jersey—Revival of the Elizabethtown controversy—The Schuyler case and its results—Increased difficulties of the proprietorship 667

CHAPTER XXVIII

PAGE

THE PROPRIETORSHIP UNDER ROYAL RULE—WEST JERSEY

Conflicting elements in the West Jersey proprietorship—Condition of the proprietary affairs at the beginning of royal rule—The conflict with Cornbury—Suspension of the council of proprietors—Its revival under Lovelace—Transactions relating to the "new Indian purchase"—The council of proprietors captured by Col. Daniel Coxe—Relations with Hunter—Preparations for a fourth proprietary dividend—Appointment of a register and surveyor by the West Jersey Society—The influence of Coxe supplanted by that of Morris—The election of James Smith as register and of James Alexander as surveyor-general—Attitude of the West Jersey proprietorship in the boundary dispute—The council once more controlled by Coxe—He opposes the adjustment with East Jersey—Renewed conflict over the surveyor-generalship—Alexander succeeds in retaining office—Later work of the council—Preparations for a fifth dividend—Business methods of the council. 702