

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The research for this book was primarily self-funded. My work, driven by a personal obsession, was finished only because of the support of a large number of people who contributed professionally, materially, and emotionally. I was able to finish writing this book thanks to the professional advice, personal support, and friendship of Gary Alan Fine, Hannah Feldman, Carolyn Chen, Javier Villa-Flores, and Ruben Martín. Gilberto Cardenas's interest and enthusiasm for this project helped me keep writing until the end. Brooke Davis Anderson, Norman Girardot, and Colin Rhodes read the manuscript and offered constructive criticism and valuable advice. I also thank Jorge Durand, who first piqued my curiosity about Ramírez. I am glad to have the opportunity to thank Douglas S. Massey once again for his unconditional support and for taking the time to read drafts of several chapters. Kristin E. Espinosa's research assistance and support during the first stage of this project was invaluable. I thank Tanya Heinrich for copyediting one of the central chapters. At the University of Texas Press, I thank my editor, Robert P. Devens, for believing in this project. Sarah B. Rosen, an editorial assistant, and Robert Kimzey, managing editor, smoothly facilitated the production of this book. Kip Keller, freelance copy editor, carefully edited this work. I sincerely appreciate their help in making it a reality.

I also thank the people who made it possible to finish the research for this book. I never will forget that the first supporter of this project was Jeff McCarl, security supervisor at the Ohio State University's Wexner Center for the Arts. In 1999, upon learning that I had driven for six hours from Chicago to Columbus to see Ramírez's work for the first time, on what was the closing date of its exhibition, and that I did not have a hotel reservation, Jeff invited me to have dinner with his family and to spend the night at his home. I was able to visit DeWitt State Hospital in Auburn, California, and begin this research in earnest because of Jonathan A. Fox, a friend who invited me to present my work on hometown associations at the University of California, Santa Cruz. My job as a research associate at the Department of Psychiatry of the University of California, Los Angeles, with the anthropologist Thomas S. Weisner made it possible to have access to the archives where I first explored the use of art therapy in California psychiatric institutions during the 1940s and 1950s. My visits to UCLA and the opportunity to stay at Tom's house allowed me to travel many times to the Sacramento area to make contacts, do preliminary work in archives, and interview people who had heard about or met Ramírez, such as James H. Durfee and other former DeWitt employees. At UCLA, I met Professor Joel T. Braslow, whose advice was crucial for locating and having access to California psychiatric archives. But it was thanks to his deep knowledge that I was able to locate Ramírez's file. But it was not until the formation of the Estate of Martín Ramírez that I received authorization to publish information from the file. I thank Christopher J. Klatell for helping me navigate this process.

I also thank for their help the following people: Karri Samson, who retired in 2012 after thirty-four years at the Auburn Public Library; Sheila K. O'Neill, the head of the Department of Special Collections and University Archives at San Jose State University; Jane Glover, coordinator of the American Art Study Center at the de Young Museum in San Francisco; Stephan Jost, former director, Stephanie Hanor, current director, and Stacie Daniels, manager of collections and exhibitions, at Mills College Art Museum in Oakland; Molly Dougherty, former gallery director at Moore College of Art in Philadelphia; Elizabeth Schmoeger, friend and archivist from the Milwaukee Art Museum; and Signe Mayfield, former curator of exhibitions at the Palo Alto Art Center.

I am grateful to employees at the following institutions, where I consulted archives: Biomedical Library, University of California, Los Angeles; California State Archives, Sacramento; library of California State University, Sacramento; Sacramento Public Library; San Francisco Public Library; Green Library, Stanford University; and the Smithsonian Archives of American Art, where I consulted the Herbert Waide Hemphill papers when I was a fellow in 2005 at the Interpretation and Representation of Latino Cultures program at the Smithsonian Center for Latino Initiatives. I thank the staff members who sent me copies of requested archival materials from the Guggenheim Museum in New York City, the Museum of Modern Art in New York City, the University of Washington Library, the University of Pennsylvania Library System, and the Syracuse University Library. In Mexico, staff members from the archive of Fundación Televisa, Archivo de la Secretaría de Relaciones Exteriores, Biblioteca Pública de Jalisco, and the Archivo Municipal de Tepatlán, Jalisco, also provided assistance.

I thank Salvador Gómez from Tepatlán for helping me find Ramírez's certificate of baptism, and Esther Piña, from La Inmaculada Concepción parish in Capilla de Milpillas, whose help was crucial to finding Ramírez's certificate of marriage. I especially thank Pedro Ramírez, my field guide from Rincón de Velázquez, who helped me locate Ramírez's daughters. It is sad that Juanita Ramírez (1919–2001), Agustina Ramírez (1923–2010), and José Gómez (1922–2012) are not with us to see this book. Many other members of Ramírez's family from the second generation shared information for this research, but I am especially grateful to his great-granddaughter Elba Alonso de Ortega for trusting in me since the first day I met her and her family in California.

I am particularly indebted to Matthew Pasto for his friendship, interest in the truth, and material support; I will never forget that he covered my expenses to travel and spend a week in San Jose, California, exploring his father's personal documents. Other significant supporters who provided information and ideas for this book include Randall Morris, Phyllis Kind, Jim Nutt, Karen Lennox, Ray Yoshida (1930–2009), Marcela Davison Avilés, John E. Ollman, Lisa Stone, Phil Hitchcock, Russell Bowman, Phil Linhares, Ann Percy, Elsa Longhauser, Roger Cardinal, Wayne Thiebaud, Cleo Wilson, Bob Roth, Anthony Petullo, Jeff Wolf, Frank Maresca, Michael D. Hall, Duff Lindsay, Brenda Brueggemann, Jon Ippolito, Kenneth Fox, Diana Solis, Ruben Espinoza, Carlos Ashida, Teresa del Conde, Robert Littman, Magda Carranza, Seth Adam Hindin, Kate Bonansinga, Don R. Birrell (1922–2006), and Victor Zamudio-Taylor (1956–2013).

Finally, le doy las gracias a la Ana Elena for her endless editing, her material support, and her apoyo con cariño.
