

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

THIS PROJECT HAS ROOTS in my doctoral dissertation in art history at the Graduate Center of the City University of New York (CUNY). I am deeply grateful to Eloise Quiñones Keber, my thesis advisor, for introducing me to the world of Mesoamerican manuscripts, sharing her expertise, and guiding me through my initial studies of Codex Boturini, Codex Azcatitlan, and Codex Aubin. I also thank Judy Sund, Katherine Manthorne, and Diana Fane for serving on my dissertation committee and providing support and helpful feedback. Courses with Guilhem Olivier and Esther Pasztory furthered my interest in and understanding of Mesoamerican art. A summer course in Oapan, Guerrero, with Jonathan Amith gave me an elementary foundation in Nahuatl. As a graduate student, I worked with Diana Fane as an intern and a research associate in the Department of the Arts of Africa, the Pacific, and the Americas at the Brooklyn Museum of Art. I am thankful to her for fostering my love of the object and all that its material qualities can tell us. My book has benefited from the opportunity to connect viscerally with and learn from original objects and archival materials.

For facilitating just that, I acknowledge the many institutions that have offered me access and assistance during my dissertation years and beyond. Madame Monique Cohen, former conservateur général in the Département des Manuscrits, Division Orientale of the Bibliothèque Nationale de France, generously allowed me access to the original Codex Azcatitlan and related materials. Carolusa González, former guardian of the Bodega de Códices at the Biblioteca Nacional de Antropología e Historia, enabled my study of the original Codex Boturini and kindly provided me with digital images. I thank her and the individuals at the Instituto Nacional de Antropología e Historia for providing me with the resources and permission to share my study of this special manuscript. The British Museum allowed me to work with the original Codex Aubin, which led to my interest in the manuscript's binding. My hunt for the source of Codex Aubin's endpapers began at the British Library and brought me to collections at Princeton University Library, Yale University Library, the University of Manchester Library, New York Public Library, the Morgan Library & Museum, and finally the Ahmanson Murphy Aldine Collection at the University of California, Los Angeles Library, where I found a match. The librarians at the J. Murrey Atkins Library at the University of North Carolina, Charlotte (UNCC) have offered continual support with interlibrary loans.

The research, travel, and conference presentations that went into the development of this book would not have been possible without financial support. In graduate school a Mellon Fellowship for Dissertation Research from the Council on Library and Information Resources allowed sustained work in Mexico, Paris, and London. A Sylvan C. Coleman and Pamela Coleman Art History Fellowship from the Metropolitan Museum of Art supported research, writing, and stimulating conversations with colleagues. Funding, including a Program Dissertation Fellowship, from the Graduate Center at CUNY facilitated my progress and my professional development. As a faculty member in the Department of Art and Art History at UNCC, I have enjoyed continued institutional support. In addition, fellowships and grants from the Consortium in Latin American and Caribbean Studies at the University of North Carolina Chapel Hill and Duke University, the Southern Regional Education Board, and the National Endowment for the Humanities have furthered my research. A Fulbright-García Robles Scholar Grant allowed me a year in Mexico to advance the book project and share ideas with colleagues. I am especially grateful to Karen Cordero and my colleagues at the Universidad Iberoamericana for hosting me and for helping to organize a joint conference with UNCC.

I am profoundly grateful to the many scholars and friends who have offered advice and support for this project over the years. Among them, I wish to acknowledge María Castañeda de la Paz and Federico Navarrete, who invited me to participate in “Más allá de Aztlan: Taller en torno al Códice Azcatitlan,” an especially fruitful symposium at the Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México, co-sponsored by the Instituto de Investigaciones Antropológicas and the Instituto de Investigaciones Históricas. Their ideas have often stimulated my thinking. I thank Merideth

Paxton and Byron Hamann for reading and commenting on my work on Codex Aubin. Elizabeth Morán and Ruth Anne Phillips provided helpful feedback on many parts of the manuscript. I especially thank Ruth Anne Phillips for providing editorial assistance on the book. I thank Debra Nagao, Doris Heyden, Alessandra Russo, Patrice Giasson, Karla Burgueño, Fico Lage, and Felipe Falcón for helping me to find a home in Mexico City. I am grateful for the support of scholars and friends like Jennifer Wagelie, Harvey Stark, Rachel Gonzalez Levy, and my colleagues at UNCC.

I am fortunate to work with an excellent team at the University of Texas Press. I thank Theresa May, former editor-in-chief, and Kerry Webb, senior acquisitions editor, for their interest in my project. My manuscript has been greatly improved by manuscript editor Lynne Chapman and the excellent work of copy editor Kathy Lewis.

This book would not be possible without the abundant and unconditional love and support of my family: Srikanth and Ava Rajagopalan; Joseph and Michele Herren; Raj and Vatsala Rajagopalan; Shelley, Derryl, Emily, Max, and Riley Halpern; Kavitha Rajagopalan and Matthew, Leela, and Krishna Young.
