ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I first wish to thank Carlos Noreña, who supervised the 2013 dissertation that eventually became this book, and the other members of my committee: Susanna Elm, J. Theodore Peña, and Dylan Sailor. I am also grateful to many colleagues working in (and on) Sicily for their advice and hospitality at various stages, most particularly Carmine Ampolo, Lorenzo Campagna, Roksana Chowaniec, Alessandro Corretti, Ralph Covino, Donatella Erdas, Antonino Facella, Caroline Goodson, Daniele Malfitana, Ferdinando Maurici, Peter Morton, Jonathan Prag, Randall Souza, Emanuele Vaccaro, Stefano Vassallo, and Roger Wilson. I have profited from discussions with Lisa Eberle, Amy Russell, and Michael J. Taylor. Malcolm Bell, Kim Bowes, Rocco Burgio, Enrico Caruso, Francesco Collura, Gioacchino Francesco La Torre, Dieter Mertens, Martin Mohr, Jari Pakkanen, Umberto Spigo, Erik Thorkildsen, Edoardo Tortorici, Alessio Toscano Raffa, Henri Tréziny, and Markus Wolf kindly let me reproduce the site plans that appear in this book.

Ralph Hexter has been an inspiring and generous mentor. I am grateful to my former colleagues at the University of California, Davis, and my current colleagues at Queen's University Belfast for their support in the intermediate and final stages of this project. In addition, I am appreciative of the support I received for my initial research in Sicily from the University of California, Berkeley: the Graduate Group in Ancient History and Mediterranean Archaeology (Nickel fund, 2011), the Department of Classics (Heller fund, 2010, and Corinne Crawford memorial fund, 2012), the Archaeological Research Facility (Stahl Grant, 2012), and the Graduate Division (summer grant, 2012).

I thank Jim Burr, Sarah McGavick, Kathy Lewis, and everyone else at the University of Texas Press. I am also grateful to Alex Walthall and the other anonymous reader, whose suggestions have made this a much better book. Lorraine Berry and Karen Rasmussen deserve thanks for their work on the maps and site plans, as does Deborah Davidson for her careful editorial eye. All of the shortcomings of this book are of course my own.

To LuAnn Kressley, Anne Pfuntner, and Jordan Pfuntner, I owe happy memories of travels in Sicily and so much more. This book is dedicated to them, with all my love.

THIS PAGE INTENTIONALLY LEFT BLANK