

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

My first debt of gratitude is owed to my wife and family. It has been my wife's constant encouragement, her willingness to sacrifice, and her desire to see this project through to its completion that has urged me on. Her wholehearted support has immeasurably eased the burden of my task.

I would also like to express my debt and my gratitude to the many colleagues and friends who have helped me, directly and indirectly, in discussions, correspondence, and many other ways. They include, in particular, Dr. William S. Livingston, Dr. H. Malcolm Macdonald, Dr. James R. Roach, Dr. Wilfred D. Webb, Dr. Orion F. White, Dr. Robert Fernea, Dr. Paul English, Professor William Zartman, and Dr. Tareq T. Ismael.

Dr. Sami Hanna, of the University of Utah Middle East Center, graciously consented to carefully read my manuscript for accuracy and consistency both in subject material and Arabic transliteration. His frank and persistent criticism helped me to tighten up my analysis and corrected some of my interpretation of rural Egypt.

I am also indebted to several graduate students in the University of Utah. Safwat Souryal and Judy Jarrow, as research assistants, carefully proofread the manuscript and offered many valuable suggestions. D. Sherman Ross and Bud D. Pate, graduate students in the Geography Department, were especially helpful in the preparation of the maps and charts used in this book.

Although many people must remain anonymous, I still wish to publicly thank my many Egyptian friends who freely gave of their time and counsel. A word of thanks is necessary to the Egyptian government officials in the Ministry of Local Administration, the Ministry of Agriculture, and the Ministry of Social Affairs who made the extra effort to meet with me and to provide me with the data and information used in this book.

Mention also must be made of the assistance provided by a Fulbright-Hayes research grant, which financed my research field trip to Egypt in 1966–1967 and a research grant provided by the Middle East Center of the University of Utah to finance the final updating research during 1969 and 1970.

As a final acknowledgment, I must mention three individuals. First, I am particularly grateful to Carl Leiden of The University of Texas at Austin for assisting me in the planning of this research, for giving valuable criticism during the compilation of data, and for reviewing the manuscript to assure good style and the accurate presentation of material. During the past few years, Dr. Leiden has not only proven to be a close friend and confidant, but has also stimulated a critical approach to political science that has proved to be invaluable. Second, I must thank Dr. Loren C. Tesdell, formerly of the American University in Cairo, for his cooperative assistance and warm friendship. His encouragement and support played a key role in ensuring the completion of this project. Finally, I must thank Dr. George Lenczowski for his friendship and guidance, his willingness to write the foreword for this book, but above all for his example as a scholar and gentleman.

Whatever merit there is in this work must be shared by those who made its completion possible; for the errors and failings, I alone am responsible.
