

Acknowledgments

This book began as a freshman writing course in central New Jersey. While the sheer physical distance between Rutgers University and the American Southwest sometimes unmoored the dissertation, the classroom roots of the project have always been rock solid. Thanks, first, to the many students who asked after it, helped keep it moving, brought their considerable critical intelligence to bear on it, and reminded me that roots are also routes. I am also grateful to the various colleagues—faculty members, graduate students, and undergraduates—who read drafts of this manuscript and offered useful suggestions: thanks to Rick Batteiger, Susan Brill, William Merrill Decker, Betsy Dudczak, Todd Fuller, Linda Leavell, Leonard Leff, Todd Petersen, Carter Revard, and Ed Walkiewicz. Jeff Walker, our department head, and Carol Moder, our associate head, helped smooth the ground, as did Cecelia Austell, Shirley Bechtel, Kim Marotta, Dale McLaughlin, and Gayle Thomas. George Kearns, Calvin Martin, Kurt Spellmeyer, and especially Ron Christ guided the study through its dissertation stage with just the right balance of rigor and flexibility. In, around, and away from New Jersey, Bob Abboud, Steve Dilks, and Ray Klimek have been fast friends and excellent traveling partners. I have been lucky, too, in my outside readers, who examined the manuscript with extraordinary care and offered challenging and constructive suggestions, many of which I have gratefully and enthusiastically adopted. Thanks, too, to my editor at the University of Texas Press, Theresa J. May, for her unfailing encouragement and good humor.

This project was funded in part by a grant from the Oklahoma Foundation for the Humanities and the National Endowment for the Humanities. It was also supported by two Dean's Incentive Grants, provided by the Oklahoma State University College of Arts and Sciences. Research for this book could not have been completed without the resources and resourcefulness of the Edmon Low Library at Oklahoma State University, especially Special Collections and Interlibrary Services. Special Collections houses the Angie Debo Papers, and I had the distinct honor of working with her personal, annotated copy of Geronimo's Story of His Life when researching Chapter 3.

All of these friends, colleagues, and institutions have helped to keep the ground relatively level and the work itself solidly grounded even when it was most actively shifting and growing. So, too, have my parents, Eric and Marion Anderson, who have been generous in their steady encouragement. There would be little or no ground, though, without Shelley Reid, whose patience, good humor, critical insight, knowledge of postmodern technology, and much more helped keep things going in more ways than an acknowledgment and a dedication combined can express.

xii Acknowledgments

American Indian Literature and the Southwest

THIS PAGE INTENTIONALLY LEFT BLANK