

Acknowledgments

The research upon which this book is based was funded by the Commission on Obscenity and Pornography, W. Cody Wilson, executive director, and by a supplemental grant from the Hogg Foundation for Mental Health, Robert Sutherland, director. Dr. Wilson, and commission staff members Bernard Horowitz, Sylvia J. Jacobs, and Anthony Abell continually facilitated our research efforts with their suggestions, criticism, and encouragement.

There was a complex but enjoyable and productive division of labor among the authors of this book. L. Zurcher provided overall direction to the study, coauthored project reports, and wrote the book manuscript from the assorted project materials. Kirkpatrick contributed significantly to the study design, coordinated the interview and data-gathering team in the field, coauthored project reports, and wrote a doctoral dissertation based upon parts of the study. He also shared the travails of preparing the book manuscript. Cushing planned and coordinated the statistical analyses of the data and coauthored a project report. Bowman also coauthored a project report and served as a member of the field team. Birkelbach, Ross, and S. Zurcher helped to prepare the structured questionnaire, served as members of the field team, contributed to the data analyses, and wrote segments of project reports. Curtis saw in the data some potentials for additional and important organizational analysis and followed his interest, much to the benefit of the book.

The following research assistants effectively and importantly contributed to the data-gathering, coding, and analysis phases of the project: Mickey C. Bowman, Marilyn Bidnick, Marilyn Clayton Willis, Rosemary Cooney, Nijole Benokraitis, Paula Miller, Linda Birkelbach, Ralph Nemir, Vicki Watkins, Janine Nussbaum, Malvern Lusky, and Julia Quick.

Would that we could retain this research family for future projects.

The following colleagues read and generously offered helpful comments on working papers and other manuscripts generated by the project: Douglas Wallace, Victor Cline, Roy Wallis, William Gamson,

Typing and clerical assistance for first drafts of chapters were provided by the Western Behavioral Sciences Institute secretarial staff, particularly Patricia Falck, Janis Andrade, Vivian Graham, and Sheila Menaguale. At the University of Texas, Susan Dittmar patiently assembled tables and the reference section and reviewed the manuscript for citation consistency. Natalia Moehle typed the first assembled draft of the manuscript and somehow kept the preparation process (and the authors) organized and relatively on schedule. The final draft of the manuscript was prepared by Pamala Bockoven, a veritable virtuoso of the typewriter. Typing costs for the final draft were funded by a small grant from the University of Texas Research Institute. Denise Cabra assisted and consoled us while the manuscript was in press production.

The leaders of the antipornography crusades we studied consistently and unselfishly cooperated with our research effort. They made their organizational records available to us, helped us gather historical data, facilitated our nonparticipant observation, and provided us with access for formal and informal interviews with their members and even with their opponents. Generosity with their time and energies and a willingness openly to represent their position were typical of the antipornography crusaders. Though some of us began and ended the research project in many ways disagreeing with their goals, we were impressed by, respect, and thankfully acknowledge their sincerity, candidness, and cooperation.

Some of the findings of our study have been published in journals, as follows: Ronald D. Birkelbach and Louis A.
