

acknowledgments

As the course of this study unfolded, I benefited greatly from the generous assistance and support of many individuals and institutions. I would like to acknowledge that my efforts were made pleasurable and productive with the help of a host of professors, colleagues, librarians, curators, editors, and students.

The encouragement, guidance, and vision of Professor William H. Goetzmann were essential not only to this project, but also to my intellectual development. Without his active participation, this study would never have been undertaken, written, or published. His counsel, suggestions, and practical assistance from the inception to the completion of the manuscript on the art and life of Jerry Bywaters were essential and invaluable as his involvement in the project evolved from professor at the University of Texas to editor of the American Studies Series. Dr. Goetzmann was also responsible for introducing my work to the University of Texas Press, where I have had the pleasure of working with the capable members of the editorial and production staff.

Professors Jeffrey Meikle, William Stott, Ron Tyler, and Becky Duval Reese also deserve special recognition for their patient assistance, able direction, and dedication to the subject. Their careful comments and practical suggestions guided my early ventures into this study. I would also like to acknowledge that my initial research for this study was supported by a University of Texas scholarship.

My research was greatly assisted by a number of colleagues who share a sincere interest in relating the story and importance of the work of Jerry Bywaters. They are given proper credit in the notes, but I wish to thank them personally. I would like to express my heartfelt appreciation for the contributions of Marla Redelsperger Ziegler and Reinhardt Ziegler who enriched this study on a number of levels as scholars, as artists, and as friends. In Dallas former friends, students, and associates of Bywaters at Southern Methodist University and at the Dallas Museum of Fine Arts, including Barney Delabano, Patsy Swank, Dan Wingren, Mary Vernon, and John Lunsford, were more than supportive of my work. DeGolyer Library Director Dr. David Farmer shared his recent research on Dallas women artists and read my manuscript with a discerning eye for historical accuracy. In Austin, artists Everett Spruce and the late William Lester were always willing to answer questions and to discuss their early Dallas days with Bywaters.

I have relied on the assistance of the staffs of many libraries and museums, but I would like to especially acknowledge the efforts and enthusiasm of Dr. Sam Ratcliffe and Ellen Buie Niewyk of the Jerry Bywaters Collection of Art of the Southwest at Southern Methodist University. They cheerfully met my every request, even on short notice. I would also like to thank the staffs of the Barker Texas History Center and the Fine Arts Library of the University of Texas who made my hours of research a joy.

At Southwest Texas State University, Brian Row, Chair of the Art Department, and my colleagues in the department offered encouragement and genuine interest in the study. Student assistants James Derrick Saunders and Dawn Hollis served the project valiantly with the tedious mechanics of editing and indexing. I also wish to acknowledge my students who challenged me to continue the study by their demanding expectations.

I am deeply grateful to Richard Bywaters and Jerry Bywaters Cochran and other members of the Bywaters family who have been both gracious and helpful in answering my questions and providing information.

Most important, I wish to express my debt of gratitude to Jerry Bywaters and Mary Bywaters. They provided much more than a wealth of invaluable archival material in support of the research. They welcomed me into their home and their lives with graciousness and enthusiasm. Despite their failing health, they endured hours of interviews without complaint. Throughout the completion of this study I encountered former colleagues, associates, students, and friends of Jerry Bywaters from across the state who held him in the highest esteem. They offered testimonials about how Bywaters had unselfishly assisted them in the pursuit of their own careers. I was constantly reminded of the scope of his influence, of his professionalism, of his generosity, and of his unquenchable spirit.
