

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The arguments and ideas I present in this book are thoroughly shaped by my fieldwork experiences in and around archaeological sites in Yucatán. There are countless people to thank for providing support and guidance in the accomplishment of this work. Though there are a few to whom I cannot express here the extent of my gratitude and appreciation, I offer the following acknowledgments.

In Yucatán, I first wish to thank the former and current directors of the Instituto Nacional de Antropología e Historia, Centro Regional Yucatán (INAH-CRY), Alfredo Barrera Rubio and Luis Millet Cámara. Also at the INAH-CRY, Licenciado Luis Parra Arceo provided much-needed clarification on key matters, even after I left the field. At Chichén Itzá, the support of site manager Licenciado Villevualdo Pech Moo was vital to my research. I also extend warm thanks and appreciation to all of the INAH custodios and their families, who were quite open to my presence and questions as well as very generous with their time.

In Pisté, Tere Castillo and her family are dearly thanked, as is her late husband, Pedro Pablo “Puas” Aguilar, to whom I dedicate this work. I thank Doña Racquel Castillo de Cocom for the use of her lovely house and Don Ezequiel and his family for taking such good care of it while I was away (and also for coming in the middle of the night to kill tarantulas). Rey and Edy Mis, Doña Elda, Don Oligario, and their family were my own away from home, and I will not soon forget our Yucatecan barbecue on the eve of Hurricane Isidore. I also thank Victor Olalde for his friendship and companionship.

I especially would like to thank Traci Ardren, co-director of the Pakbeh Project, and Aline Magnoni, Scott Hutson, and other project members who were very kind to invite me to share their work and their lives in Chunchucmil. Other members of the Chunchucmil community deserve special attention, including Gualberto Mena, Aida, Guadalupe, Juventino, and all of their family. I also extend thanks to the many residents of the town of Kochol who were warm and welcoming to my presence and research. I could not have accomplished this research in the field without the friendship and advice of Juan Castillo Cocom and Liana Chatzigeorgiou, Fernando Armstrong Fumero, Carlos Bojórquez, Quetzil Castañeda, and Jorge Ortíz.

My friends and colleagues at Rice University deserve special merit. George Marcus, James Faubion, Stephen Tyler, and Beatriz González-Stephan were kind and supportive in their suggestions and guidance and, perhaps most importantly, patient and good-humored while this project was in its dissertation stage. Angela Rivas, Michael Powell, Nahal Naficy, and Timothy Wood have provided a stimulating, if far-flung, network of intellectual camaraderie for several years now. This book was completed at Wesleyan University, and I especially thank Elizabeth Traube and my colleagues in the Department of Anthropology for providing me with a comfortable and collegial environment in which to teach and write. Thanks also to John Hammond for his technical assistance preparing the images that appear in this book.

Special thanks to Theresa May and the University of Texas Press for their support and hard work in making this book a reality. Lynne Chapman, Tana Silva, and two anonymous reviewers took extraordinary care with this work. I deeply appreciate their efforts.

The research presented here was made possible through the financial support of the Rice University Department of Anthropology, the Ora N. Arnold Graduate Research Fellowship, a Dissertation Improvement Grant from the National Science Foundation, and a Dissertation Research Grant from the Wenner-Gren Foundation for Anthropological Research.

And final thanks to Paul Smith, whose heart, humor, patience, and generosity are truly monumental.
