

Acknowledgments

The writing of this book would not have been possible without a 2009–2010 Faculty Fellowship from the College of Liberal Arts at the University of Texas at Austin. My thanks to Dean Randy Diehl and Senior Associate Dean Richard Flores. The Department of English at the University of Texas at Austin provided a supportive intellectual home for Américo Paredes during his academic career, as it has for me during the last thirty years and before that as a student. I thank them all, but especially the two fine chairs under whom I have served, Jim Garrison and Elizabeth Cullingford.

At the University of Texas I have also learned much that has been central to this work from the many fine graduate students and the thirty wonderful faculty affiliated with the Center for Mexican American Studies (CMAS). I am especially grateful for the personal and intellectual presence of Emilio Zamora and John Moran González. I especially thank Interim Director Domino Perez and Associate Director Deborah Paredes for their competent and creative administration of CMAS during my leave of absence with the always able and loyal support of the fine CMAS staff: Luis Guevara, Johannah Hochhalter, Natasha Saldaña, Ileana Cerda, and Alberto González.

Américo Paredes was the founding Director of CMAS in 1970 with only two faculty including him. He would be pleased beyond measure to see CMAS today.

Once again, I continue to be so grateful for the superb University of Texas at Austin libraries, but especially the rare books and manuscript holdings at the Benson Latin American Collection and the Mexican American Library Project, which house the Américo Paredes Papers.

This book was written mostly in Long Beach, California, directly after my marriage to Teresa McKenna, professor of English and American studies at the University of Southern California and a former post-doctoral fellow with Américo Paredes. She has provided sustaining love and unfailing support; informed, critical conversation; a close reading of the manuscript; a lovely study in which to work; and Kiki, el perro chihuahuense, who rose with me every morning to make sure I was under way in my writing before going back to sleep. For sustaining this writing in their own way, I also thank the entire McKenna family, especially my wonderful new sisters-in-law, Amelia and Irene, for taking this wayward Tejano into their warm embrace. Ollie provided ample, grounded, and solid support as well.

I completed the final republication phase of the book during my first semester at my new academic home in the Department of English and the Institute for Latino Studies at the University of Notre Dame. For their warm welcome and nurturing support, I thank my new chairpersons: first, John Sitter and now Valerie Sayers; the department, the Institute and its former director, Gilberto Cárdenas; and my close friend Dolores García. I am also very grateful to Dean John T. McGreevy of the College of Arts and Letters for his generous support.

Finally, of course, once again, I must acknowledge Américo Paredes for changing my life at a critical moment and sustaining me throughout my academic work even in his passing.

Portions of this study appeared in the Journal of American Folklore as well as in American Literary History. These and yet other sections were also presented as public lectures at the universities of California-Berkeley, California-Los Angeles, Illinois-Urbana/Champaign, Málaga, Michigan State, New Mexico, Texas-Austin, Texas-San Antonio, and at the annual meetings of the American Studies Association, the American Literature Association, and the American Ethnological Society. A portion of Chapter 3 was presented as the Distinguished Phillips Barry Lecture on Folk-song at the 2004 meeting of the American Folklore Society. I thank them all for these opportunities.

The anonymous readers of the manuscript are much thanked for their very useful commentary. Virginia Raymond read the entire manuscript with great care and editorial attention. Its failings are all my own.

Américo Paredes

THIS PAGE INTENTIONALLY LEFT BLANK