Acknowledgments

TO JOHN INCLEDON, who first spoke to me about Lezama and invited me to read my first paper about him, I register my gratitude. Julio Rodríguez-Luis does not share my enthusiasm for Lezama, but the generous and friendly dialogue we have maintained since I wrote a graduate seminar paper with him has helped me refine my position. I wish Emir Rodríguez Monegal could see that the paper he read and received with enthusiasm has now grown to be a book; his encouragement was decisive. Many people received my evolving work on Lezama with warmth: Saúl Sosnowski, Sara Castro-Klarén, Francisco J. Cevallos, David T. Gies, Javier Herrero, Enrico Mario Santí, Randolph Pope, Eugenio Suárez-Galbán, Gustavo Pérez Firmat, and René Prieto. I thank them all for their support along the way.

Roberto González Echevarría, Donald L. Shaw, and Tobin Siebers read the manuscript with great care, pointed out infelicities, and offered valuable suggestions. Roger Shattuck read Chapter 6 and gave useful advice. Gail Moore and the staff of the University of Virginia's College of Arts and Sciences' Word Processing Center taught me to use a word processor and printed many drafts. I owe a special word of thanks to my friend Richard Vassos, whose generous offer of support gave me much peace of mind.

I would also like to thank the various publishers and institutions that gave me permission to reproduce illustrations and previously published material. They are identified on the copyright page and in the illustration captions.

The final word I reserve for Karen Resnick Pellón, my wife, without whom this book simply would not have been written. Thanks.
