

Acknowledgments

More than my efforts went into this work. The aid, guidance, energy, and wisdom of many others went a long way toward its completion. The project was initially made possible by a fellowship from the Doherty Foundation; subsequent grants were made by the Graduate School and the Institute of Latin American Studies at The University of Texas at Austin. Córdoba is for North Americans an academic frontier, as is still much of the Argentine interior; without the help of cordobeses involved in historical research, mine would have floundered. Specifically, I would like to single out Dr. Aurelio Tanodi of the Escuela de Archiveros of the Instituto de Estudios Americanistas, and the director of the Instituto, Dr. Carlos Luque Colombres. Licenciado Joaquín García gave me total freedom to use the extensive newspaper collection of the Biblioteca Mayor of the Universidad Nacional de Córdoba, as well as an office; Dr. Walter Dorflinger of the Department of Economics helped with matters of sampling procedures. The archival work was made much easier by the courtesy extended by Dr. José María de Elías, associate director of the Registro Civil Municipal; Monsignor Audicio, director of the archive of the Archdiocese of Córdoba; Licenciado Moyano Aliaga, director of the Archivo Histórico de la Provincia; and Licenciado Miguel Angel Terré, director of the Archivo Municipal.

Fellow historians Edmundo Heredia, Emiliano Endrek, María Cristina Vera de Flachs, and Hector and Norma Lobos provided academic and social life. Richard Graham, Karl Schmitt, and Richard Sinkin read earlier versions of the work and provided insightful and useful comments. Tom McGann, who first proposed to me the possibility of researching a social history project in Córdoba, followed his suggestion with active interest, comments, and the best of all forms of supervision: the encouragement of independence. The effects of the exchanges I had with Gene Sofer in the course of several years are present throughout this book. Lenore T. Szuchman provided all.
