

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Since the early 1990s, I have received research support from various sources, at UCLA and beyond, without which I could not have completed much of the work collected in this book. I gratefully acknowledge the following research support:

- The Chicana Dissertation Fellowship in the Department of Chicana/o Studies at U.C., Santa Barbara, 1992–1993, which brought me to Southern California.
- The PEW Foundation/Tomás Rivera Center Dissertation Completion residencies that hijacked several of us into a remote Radisson in San Antonio, Texas, and sat us next to a computer and a faculty mentor for two hot weeks in July to hammer out drafts of dissertation chapters.
- The Ford Foundation/National Research Council Fellowship Dissertation Completion Fellowship, 1993–1994, which introduced me to the power of networking.
- The Postdoctoral Minority-Scholar-in-Residence Fellowship at Pomona College, 1994–1995, which gave me time to develop new courses in Chicana/o Studies and prepared me for life in the fast lane at UCLA.
- The several faculty research grants I received from the UCLA Academic Senate over the years, which have allowed me to employ undergraduate and graduate research assistants, especially during the pretenure years as I worked at transforming my dissertation into a book.
- The two Institute of American Cultures grants administered through the Chicano Studies Research Center at UCLA, which allowed me to complete my popular culture anthology.
- The generous Shirley Collier Literary Prize I received from the UCLA English Department for my Sor Juana novel, and my then colleague Greg Sarris, who nominated the book.
- The Rockefeller Fellowship for Latino/a Study at the Smithsonian Institution, which took me to Washington, DC, in spring 1999 to begin my project on place and identity in Chicana art.

- The Roderick Endowed Chair in English I received from the University of Texas at El Paso, which took me back to my alma mater in fall 1999, where I began my research into the Juárez femicides.
- The UCLA Gold Shield Alumnae Award for Faculty Excellence that the kind ladies of that prestigious organization bestowed on me in 2008, which came with a $30,000 monetary award that helped fund two years of research and resulted in two new research articles and two new anthologies—one on the Juárez femicides and the other on a controversial art piece by Alma López.

I would also like to acknowledge the influence, example, and comadrazgo of my academic familia, Emma Pérez, Deena González, Ellie Hernández, Antonia Castañeda, and Arturo Madrid. A special shout-out to Jane Caputi and Chela Sandoval for their supportive and constructive remarks on this manuscript, and their brilliant work that has so impacted my own scholarship. And to Theresa May, editor-in-chief at UT Press, with whom I have had the great fortune of working over the last twenty years, since that first meeting of Ford Fellows in 1993.

To the different students I’ve mentored over these two decades, and who worked closely with me on research projects, conference organizing, index building, and administrative tasks, I express my deepest gratitude: Elena, Angélica, Mike, Heather, Georgina, Allison, Rachel, Kendy, and the rest of you whose names aren’t listed here but who know who you are.

Finally, I would also like to acknowledge the hunger strikers who in 1993 put their lives at risk for the establishment of a Chicana/o Studies department at UCLA, and my colleagues at the César Chávez Department, especially my fellow founding faculty members, who together kept the program grounded in the face of musical chairpersons, student mutiny, and collegial boycotts in those early years. We lived through some interesting times, but most of us are still here, and collectively, day by day, year by year, we have created a permanent academic home for Chicana/Chicano Studies at UCLA.

To Olivia Díaz, Elena Mohseni, and Ellie Hernández—the staff at the Chávez Department—without whose rock-solid support, buen humor, and expertise I could not have endured my three-year chairship.

To Vice Chancellor Scott Waugh, for all of his support of my research, my teaching, and my leadership over these past twenty years.

To my allies on campus, among whom I would especially like to recognize Rosina Becerra, Christine Littleton, Abel Valenzuela, Charlene

Villaseñor Black, María Cristina Pons, Vilma Ortiz, Chon Noriega, Rafael Pérez-Torres, Arthur Little, and Jim Schultz.

More than anything, I am blessed by the stabilizing presence, support, and TLC of my wife, Alma López, who has held my hand, fed my hunger, and massaged my back through the completion of this and several other books, pulling all-nighters with me in solidarity. For your artistic magic, your skills as a visual professional, and your activist spirit, darling, I am so very grateful. This book is for you.

THIS PAGE INTENTIONALLY LEFT BLANK

[UN]FRAMING THE “BAD WOMAN”

Figure i.1. Woman with Frames, © 2010. UNAM Sculpture Garden, Ciudad Universitaria, Mexico City. Photograph by Raymond Meier. Photo credit: Trunk Archive.