THE BOOK that follows is part of a larger educational project, "Perspectives on Peace: The Middle East," funded by the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, the Ford Foundation, and the Greenville Foundation with assistance from ARAMCO Services Company and the James R. Dougherty, Jr., Foundation. The project also includes a one-hour documentary film, a study guide, and a teleconference.

The book itself is funded partially through a grant from the United States Outreach Fund of the Middle East Institute, Washington, D.C.

For help and support, we are also indebted to the Center for Middle Eastern Studies, University of Texas at Austin, and its directors, Ian Manners (1987–1991) and Robert Holz (1991–). Virginia Howell, Persis Karim, Sascha Cohen, and Roberta Micallef all helped with editing, proofreading, and typing various versions of the manuscript. Our editor at U.T. Press, Frankie Westbrook, has been a model of persuasion, and we appreciate her intelligence and her patience. We thank our husbands, Robert Fernea and Joseph Dodge, who put up with the outlandish arrangements and unusual hours which proved necessary in order to finish the manuscript six months ahead of time—to coordinate with the appearance of the film, The Struggle for Peace: Israelis and Palestinians.

Mao was wrong. Power does not come out of the barrel of a gun. Power comes from shared ideas, shared hope, shared ambitions, shared actions. When such sharing goes deep enough in enough people, soldiers don't fire, tank commanders don't obey orders, prisons won't take prisoners.

That is history, again and again.
