

Acknowledgments

In writing The Road to El Cielo, we drew material from many sources: research papers, personal journals, historical accounts, and letters from individuals. Our thanks go to all who contributed in various ways.

We wish to recognize a number of individuals who were most influential in providing background material, moral support, or critical evaluation of the manuscript:

Nancy McGowan, our superb illustrator and fellow Mexico traveler; Paul S. Martin, whose critical reading of the manuscript was most helpful and whose earlier research in the Gómez Farías region was the source of much of our information; Lawrence V. Lof, who persuaded us to do this book, assisted us in many ways, and pointed out necessary alterations to the manuscript; Marshall C. Johnston, who first told us of Frank Harrison and Rancho del Cielo and who reviewed the manuscript with a critical eye.

William Bishel, our supportive editor; Shannon Davies, whose early editorial assistance and encouragement kept us on track; Sharon L. Casteel, who had the unenviable task of converting the typed copy to computer disk; Sterling Evans, whose painstaking perusal of the manuscript and insightful suggestions were most helpful.

Robert and Mabel Deshayes, companions and co-workers on many Mexico adventures; Alfred Richardson, incomparable friend and confidant—very much a part of our Mexico experience; the faculty, staff, and students of the Gorgas Science Society, whose assistance and companionship at Rancho del Cielo over a span of many years will always be treasured.

Byron Eugene Harrell, whose study of the birds of the cloud forest at Rancho del Cielo ignited our interest in the region; the late George Miksch Sutton, who loved El Cielo as few men have, and whose writings on Mexico inspired our own efforts.

Special recognition is due our friends in Mexico: Laura Alcalá Vargas, whose tireless efforts were largely responsible for the creation of El Cielo Biosphere Reserve; Andres M. Sada, who experienced the wonders of El Cielo in our company and saw the value of preserving its environment; and all the officials and other citizens of Mexico who helped bring the dream to reality.

FRED AND MARIE S. WEBSTER

There are other special people, but none more special than Dr. James George, a major backer of the Rancho del Cielo biological station, who reviewed the manuscript, and Charlotte Boyle, our most ardent advocate, who was eager to promote the manuscript when it was yet in first draft.
