

Contents

|                                                              |      |
|--------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| Acknowledgments                                              | ix   |
| A Note on Translation and Orthography                        | xiii |
| Introduction: Toward a New Cogito                            | 1    |
| 1. Gender and Discursive Space(s) in the Seventeenth Century | 15   |
| The Bed and the Library                                      | 17   |
| La Prétieuse : The Value of the Feminine Word         | 34   |
| Signed in Invisible Ink                                      | 43   |
| Freedom and Subversion                                       | 54   |
| 2. The Cartésiennes                                          | 64   |
| Descartes and Elisabeth                                      | 67   |
| A "Beau Trio"                                                | 78   |
| Chameleons of a Different Color                              | 98   |
| Enlightened Views                                            | 106  |
| 3. Fontenelle and the Ladies                                 | 123  |
| How Did the Marquise Get So Smart?                           | 125  |
| The "Real Marquises"                                         | 139  |
| A Voyage into Feminine Space                                 | 150  |
| 4. Femmes Philosophes or Femmes/Philosophes?                 | 168  |
| Marie Anne de Roumier Robert: A "Nouvelle Philosophe"        | 169  |
| Emilie du Châtelet: "If I were a man . . ."                  | 189  |
| Olympe de Gouges: "Placed and displaced . . ."               | 213  |
| Conclusion: Beyond the Ellipsis                              | 235  |
| Bibliography                                                 | 241  |
| Index                                                        | 259  |

