

Acknowledgments

In the course of preparing this work, I have incurred many debts, personal and institutional, which I acknowledge here. First, the scholarship of Donald Kagan, my former mentor at Cornell University, has always inspired me. Although his major efforts, resulting in a masterful four-volume history of the Peloponnesian War, fall outside the period with which my book is primarily concerned, his approach has illuminated the subject and helped to shape my thinking about Greek history. I owe special thanks to three colleagues with whom I have often discussed Greek history, and whose friendship and encouragement over the years have meant much to me: W. Lindsay Adams, Eugene N. Borza, and Lawrence A. Tritle. Among others whose research on fourth-century Greece has contributed much to my understanding of this subject, I especially note John Buckler, Jack Cargill, Paul Cartledge, George Cawkwell, Ephraim David, Stephen Hodkinson, Derek Mosley, and Shalom Perlman. I do not agree with all their opinions, but this book owes a great deal to their work. Finally, I thank the anonymous readers for Cornell University Press, whose close and careful attention to my manuscript saved me from errors and helped me to focus my thinking and to reduce a lengthy work to more manageable proportions.

The American Council of Learned Societies, with support from the National Endowment for the Humanities, granted me a year's fellowship to supplement a sabbatical leave, and San Diego State University also granted me a Summer Faculty Fellowship and several semesters of reduced teaching from a heavy instructional program in order to facilitate my research. The staff of the Interlibrary Loan Department of Love Library, in particular Kelley Martin, expedited my requests for materials not available at San Diego State University. Edmond Frezouls, dean of the Faculty of Humanities at the University of Strasbourg, generously accorded me hospitality for a semester of research during my sabbatical.

I thank the editor of the Ancient World, Al. N. Oikonomides, for permission to reprint portions of two articles from that journal, "Agesilaus and the Failure of Spartan Hegemony," Ancient World 5 (1982): 67–78; and "The Generalship of King Agesilaus of Sparta," Ancient World 8 (1983): 119–27, which appear in modified form in chapters 1, 2, and 4; Mark H. Munn for permission to use his maps from "Agesilaos' Boiotian Campaigns and the Theban Stockade of 378–377 B.C." (Classical Antiquity 6 [1987]: 106–38), as the basis for figures 4 and 5, and Anne Brook for drawing all the figures in the book. Kathy Peck typed an early version of the manuscript, before the advent of my computer literacy. Janet Hamann prepared the index. To all, I express sincere thanks.

The most important debt, however, I owe to my wife, Lynda, for years of encouragement, support, patience, and devotion; without her, this book would never have been written.

C. D. H.

San Diego, California