

Acknowledgments

This book would have been impossible without the help of many people, many more than I am able to name in these few pages. First, my sincere thanks to Christian Smith for his mentorship and persistent confidence in me and in this book from the very beginning, especially in my many moments of doubt. I am grateful to him and also to Lyn Spillman for patiently reading several drafts of these chapters and my grant applications, as well as for writing the numerous letters of recommendation needed to fund my research. I am also especially grateful to Omar Lizardo and Dave Sikkink for our many thought-provoking conversations and for their insightful comments. Many thanks to Elaine Howard Ecklund and David Johnson for their encouragement and immensely helpful feedback. I am deeply grateful to Jim Lance, my editor at Cornell University Press, and to the reviewers of this manuscript for their enthusiastic support.

Conversations with several scholars over the past few years produced many helpful insights that shaped this book. My sincere thanks to Scott Appleby, Carson Dutt, Phil Gorski, Brad Gregory, Vittorio Hosle, Mike and Ines Jindra, Mary-Ellen Konieczny, Alasdair Macintyre, Margarita Mooney, Ebrahim Moosa, Jim Nolan, Tim Rutzou, Jason Springs, Don Stelluto, and Robert Wuthnow.

I am also grateful to Robert Brenneman, Anne Snyder Brooks, and Daniel McInerney for their detailed feedback and editing advice on earlier versions of the manuscript, and to Gail Chalew for her excellent copyediting. Many friends and colleagues provided valuable insights and comments on my ideas and drafts; they include Jade Avelis, Cole Carnasecca, Austin Choi-Fitzpatrick, Kari Christoffersen, Hilary Davidson Green, Jeff Guhin, Trish Herzog, Jon Hill, Peter Munday, Melissa Pirkey, Paul Radich, Dan Roloff, Katherine Sorrell, Ana Velitchkova, Adrian Walker, and Meredith Whitnah. My sincere thanks to you all!

Ideas underlying many of this book's themes were presented at various workshops and conferences, including the annual meetings of the American Sociological Association, the American Academy of Religion, the Academy of Management, and the Society for the Scientific Study of Religion. I am especially grateful for feedback received from the working group on the Research and Analysis in the Sociology of Religion and from the Culture Workshop at Notre Dame, the Social Science Research Council Dissertation Workshop, the Religion and Public Life Program at Rice University, and the Human Ecology Institute at Catholic University of America.

Writing this book would have been impossible without the generous support of the Graduate School, the Institute for the Study of the Liberal Arts, and the Kellogg Institute for International Studies at the University of Notre Dame, as well as the Society for the Social Scientific Study of Religion. Sincere thanks to Stephen Keck and the Department of International Studies at the American University of Sharjah for hosting me as a visiting scholar. Thanks also to the Miranda and Avallone families for hosting me in Dubai, to the Driessens for their hospitality in Doha, to the Ahmed family for their hospitality in Kuwait, and to Michael and Kishore for providing me office space and finding me an apartment in Rome.

My sincere thanks to many friends for their invaluable companionship, which enabled me to sustain the energy and dedication needed to complete this book; they include Pietro Bocchia, the Buschbachers, Paolo Carozza, Carolyn Chau, Brandon Cook, Luigi Crema, Kim D'Souza, the Gardners, the Gianferaris, Maddi Giungi, the Michalska-Smiths, Josh Norcross, Fr. Robert Pelton, Pier Pigozzi, Alisha Ruiss, Vivek Trindade, and the Violettes.

Claire Vaidyanathan, my spouse and motivational guru, helped me think through every idea in this book and listened to more presentations and read more drafts than is good for anyone. Thank you so much for your continuing encouragement, inspiration, and love, without which this book would never have come to fruition. Irene, Marta, Mikey, and Frankie: thank you for accompanying me through this work, day in and day out—you have not known a world in which this project did not exist!—and for making it all worthwhile. My sincere thanks to my parents for putting up with this strange line of work, and especially to my brother Venky, without whose help my research in India would have been practically impossible. Heartfelt thanks also to the Petersons for all their support throughout the years.

Finally, my sincere gratitude to everyone who participated in the study, for inviting me into your lives and giving me your time, trust, and friendship. I have learned so much from you and hope that you find the results of the study interesting, if not useful.
