

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The idea for this volume had its origins at a conference in February 1999 at the University of Southern Denmark. My thanks are due to the British Council in Copenhagen for their financial assistance in organising that meeting, as well as to all of my colleagues in Denmark who lent their support, particularly Nils Arne Sorensen, Joyce Senders Pedersen and Flemming Andersen. The task of assembling a full complement of contributors was eased considerably by the generous assistance of John MacKenzie and Jeffrey Richards. John MacKenzie deserves a special thanks in his role as series editor. His encouragement and enthusiasm were instrumental in getting the project off the ground, and he has remained a source of ready advice throughout. The staff at Manchester University Press have also been highly constructive and supportive, and through their anonymous readers have proposed changes which served to broaden the scope of the book considerably. Finally, my thanks go to all of the contributors in the volume for their co-operation, enthusiasm and commitment. In particular, Hsu-Ming Teo has been an invaluable sounding-board from the outset, offering ideas and criticism far exceeding the usual demands on a contributor.
