The origins of this book lie in an undergraduate thesis submitted in 2011. It would be impossible to thank every person and institution involved in shaping my ideas about medieval slavery since then, but I am deeply grateful to each and every one. This particular project was developed as part of a Past and Present Fellowship at the Institute of Historical Research, University of London, from 2018 to 2020 and owes its completion to the support of the Department of History at the University of Glasgow. It has benefited immensely from the comments and critiques of Alice Rio, Andrew Roach, Jonathan Shepard, and David Kalhous, and any remaining errors are my own. The maps included would not have been possible without the enthusiasm of Daniel Dougherty, who patiently helped visualise my ideas.

Since leaving academia in 2021 I have been overwhelmed by the kindness and encouragement of my former and present colleagues at Edinburgh Napier University and National Museums Scotland, especially the Treasure Trove team. I am most of all indebted to the continuous support of my friends and family, especially my husband, Dan, and my feline writing companion, Delphi.
