This book is the outcome of a workshop held at the Gulf Research Meeting in Cambridge, England in 2018. The workshop was, and remains, quite unique in having brought together early-career and mid-career political scientists, sociologists and anthropologists from the Gulf region, the Horn of Africa and elsewhere. It was invaluable in drawing on interdisciplinary perspectives as well as empirical insights gleaned from a range of field research undertaken in the Horn as well as other parts of Africa, the Middle East and Europe. Over the course of two and a half days we were able to discuss and debate in a free and open forum and to benefit from critical perspectives provided by discussants as well as thoughtful questions raised by colleagues and visitors to the session. This has all been fed into the work and provided a more focused and critical analysis, which has been captured in this book.

For the opportunity to initiate this research project, we thank Dr Abdulaziz O. Sager and his staff at the Gulf Research Center, who made the complex logistics possible, including Elsa Courdier and Sanya Kapasi. We are grateful to Dr Oskar Ziemelis for facilitating the transfer of copyright, which enabled this production to go ahead. For capturing the research in this book format, the credit goes to Rob Byron at Manchester University Press, who expressed an early interest in the project, along with the support and constructive feedback from the anonymous reviewers. At the press, we also thank Dr Lucy Burns, who helped keep us on track, especially during the draft manuscript phase. As always, our heartfelt thanks go to our families, who have had to put up with time spent on getting this manuscript ready for production alongside our other commitments.
